I L I A D

HOMER.

Translated by Mr. POPE.

VOL. IV.

Men' moveat cimex Pantilius? Aut crucier, quòd Vellicat absentem Demetrius? Aut quòd ineptus Fannius Hermogenis lædat conviva Tigelli? Plotius, & Varius, Mecænas, Virgiliusque. Valgius, & probet hæc Octavius optimus! Hor.

The SIXTH EDITION.

DUBLIN:

Printed for W. and W. SMITH, P. and W. WILSON, J. EXSHAW, and H. BRADLEY, in Dame-street.

M.DCC, LXX.

Neptune proved to fee the Greeks routed, transports himself out of is fee to their Camp, & affinning is shape of Calchas receives their Camp, which was entierty Sunk.

的《《美女》,"你说我多多来,你说我这家的

THE

THIRTEENTH BOOK

OF THE

ILIAD.

The ARGUMENT.

The fourth battle continued, in which Neptune assists the Greeks: The acts of Idomeneus.

TEptune, concerned for the loss of the Grecians, upon seeing the fortification forced by Hector (who had entered the gate near the station of the Ajaxes) assumes the shape of Calchas, and inspires those heroes to oppose him: Then in the form of one of the generals, encourages the other Greeks who had retired to their wef-The Ajaxes form their troops into a close phalanx, and put a flop to Hector and the Trojans. Several deeds of valour are performed; Meriones, lofing his spear in the encounter, repairs to seek another at the tent of Idomeneus: This occasions a conversation between thefe two warriors, who return together to the battle. Idomeneus fignalizes his courage above the rest; he kills Othryoneus, Asius, and Alcathorus: Deiphobus and Aneas march against him, and at length Idome-Menelaus wounds Helenus and kills Pineus retires. fander. The Trojans are repulsed in the left wing. Hector fill keeps his ground against the Ajaxes, till being galled by the Locrian slingers and archers, Polydamas advises to call a council of war: Hector approves his advice, but goes first to rally the Trojans; upbraids Paris, rejoins Polydamas, meets Ajax aguin, and renews the attack

The eight and twentieth day still continues. The scene is between the Grecian wall and the sea-shore.

THE

I be it is now rate i . I at HoTeen of blood,

And where the lite famid Fit penaltian diskys.

ou elle, inheille a leet best fant, alle in

THIRTEENTH BOOK

es was incapary to the continue.

due. Madam Proche is too refined on triblad

I L I A D.

from a realist the first seed of the first from

HEN now the Thund'rer on the sea-beat coast
Had fix'd great Hector and his conqu'ring host:

He left them to the fates, in bloody fray
To toil and struggle thro' the well-fought day.
Then turn'd to Thracia from the field of fight
Those eyes that shed insufferable light,

To

V. 5. Then turn'd to Thracia from the field of fight.] One might fancy at the first reading of this passage, that Homer here turned aside from the main view of his poem, in a vain oftentation of learning, to amuse himself with a foreign and unnecessary description of the manners and customs of these nations. But we A 3 shall shall find, upon better consideration, that Jupiter's turning aside his eyes was necessary to the conduct of the work, as it gives opportunity to Neptune to assist the Greeks, and thereby causes all the adventures of this book. Madam Dacier is too refined on this occasion; when she would have it, that Jupiter's averting his eyes signifies his abandoning the Trojans; in the same manner as the scripture represents the Almighty turning his face from those whom he deserts. But at this rate Jupiter, turning his eyes from the battle, must desert both the Trojans and the Greeks; and it is evident from the context, that Jupiter intended nothing less than to let the Trojans suffer.

To where the Mysians prove their martial force, And hardy Thracians tame the savage horse; And where the far-fam'd Hippemolgian strays, Renown'd for justice, and for length of days. Thrice happy race! that, innocent of blood, From milk, innoxious, seek their simple food:

V. 9. And where the far-fam'd Hippemolgian strays.] There is much dispute among the Criticks, which are the proper names, and which the epithets, in these verses? Some making ἀγανοὶ the epithet to ἱππημολγοὶ, others ἱππημολγοὶ the epithet to ἀγανοὶ; and ἀβίοι, which by the common interpreters is thought only an epithet, is by Strabo and Ammianus Marcellinus made the proper name of a people. In this diversity of opinions, I have chosen that which I thought would make the best figure in poetry. It is a beautiful and moral imagination, to suppose that the long life of the Hippemolgians was an effect of their simple diet, and a reward of their justice: And that the Supreme Being, displeased at the continued scenes of human violence and diffention, as it were recreated his eyes in contemplating

It is observable that the same custom of living on milk is preserved to this day by the Tartars, who inhabit the same country.

Jowe

10

BOOK XIII. HOMER'S ILIAD.

3

Jove sees delighted; and avoids the scene Of guilty Troy, of arms, and dying men: No aid, he deems, to either hoft is giv'n, i5 While his high law suspends the pow'rs of heaven. Meantime the * Monarch of the wat'ry main Observ'd the Thund'rer, nor observ'd in vain. In Samothracia, on a mountain's brow, Whose waving woods o'erhung the deeps below, He sat; and round him cast his azure eyes, Where Ida's misty tops confus'dly rise; Below, fair Ilion's glitt'ring spires were seen; The crouded ships, and sable seas between. There, from the crystal chambers of the main 25 Emerg'd, he sate; and mourn'd his Argives flain. At Your incens'd, with grief and fury stung, Prone down the rocky fleep he rush'd along;

* Neptune.

Fierce

V. 27. At Jove incens'd, with grief and fury stung,

Prone down the rocky steep he rush'd—]

Mons. de la Motte has played the Critick upon this passage a little unadvisedly. "Neptune, says he, is im"patient to assist the Greeks. Homer tells us that this
"God goes first to seek his chariot in a certain place;
"next he arrives at another place nearer the camp;
"there he takes off his horses, and then he locks them
"fast, to secure them at his return. The detail of so "many particularities no way suits the majesty of a
"God, or the impatience in which he is described."
Another French writer makes answer, that however impatient Neptune is represented to be, none of the Fierce as he past, the losty mountains nod, The forests shake! earth trembled as he trod, And felt the footsteps of th' immortal God.

30

From

Gods ever go to the war without their arms; and the arms, chariot and horses of Neptune were at Ægæ. He makes but sour steps to get thither; so that what M. de la Motte calls being slow, is swiftness itself. The God puts on his arms, mounts his chariot, and departs: nothing is more rapid than his course; he slies over the waters: The verses of Homer in that place run swifter than the God himself. It is sufficient to have ears, to perceive the rapidity of Neptune's chariot in the very sound of those three lines, each of which is entirely compos'd of dactyles, excepting that one spondee which must terminate the verse.

Βῆ δ' ἐλάαν ἐπὶ κύματ', ἄταλλε δὲ κήτε' ὑπ' αὐτῶ, Γηθοσύνη δὲ βάλασσα διίζαίο, τοὶ δ' ἐπέτονίο Ἐίμφα μάλ, ἐδ' ὑπένερθε διαίνείο χαλκεος αζων.

V. 29 -The lofty mountains nod,

The forests shake! earth trembled as he trod,
And felt the footsteps of th' immortal God.]

Longinus confesses himself wonderfully struck with the sublimity of this passage. That Critic, after having blam'd the defects with which Homer draws the manners of his Gods, adds, that he has much better succeeded in describing their sigure and persons. He owns that he often paints a God such as he is, in all his majesty and grandeur, and without any mixture of mean and terrestrial images; of which he produces

The book of Psalms affords us a description of the like sublime manner of imagery, which is parallel to this. O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people, this passage as a remarkable instance, and one that had challenged the admiration of all antiquity.

when

From realm to realm three ample strides he took, And, at the fourth, the distant Egæ shook.

when thou didst march through the wilderness, the earth shook, the heavens dropped at the presence of God, even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Ifrael, Pf. 68.

V. 32. --- Three ample strides he took.] This is a very grand imagination, and equals, if not transcends, what he has seigned before of the passage of this God. We are told that in sour steps he reach'd Egæ, which (supposing it meant of the town of that name in Eubæa, which lay the nighest to Thrace) is hardly less than a degree at each step. One may, from a view of the map, imagine him striding from promontory to promontory, his first step on mount Athos, his second on Pallene, his third upon Pelion, and his fourth in Eubæa. Dacier is not to be forgiven for omitting this miraculous circumstance, which so perfectly agrees with the marvellous air of the whole passage, and without which the sublime image of Homer is not compleat.

V. 33. --- The distant Ægæ shook.] There were three places of this name which were facred to Neptune; an island in the Egean sea, mentioned by Nicostratus, a town in Peloponnesus, and another in Eubæa. Homer is supposed in this passage to speak of the last; but the question is put, why Neptune, who stood upon a hill in Samothrace, instead of going on the left to Troy, turns to the right, and takes a way contrary to that which leads to the army? This difficulty is ingenioully folved by the old Scholiast; who says, that Jupiter being now on mount Ida, with his eyes turned towards Thrace, Neptune could not take the direct way from Samothrace to Troy without being discovered by him; and therefore fetches this compass to conceal himself. Eustathius is contented to say, that the Poet made Neptune go far about, for the opportunity of those fine descriptions of the palace, the chariot, and the passage of this God.

A 5

Far in the bay his shining palace stands,

Eternal frame! not rais'd by mortal hands:

This having reach'd, his brass-hoof'd steeds he reins,

Fleet as the winds, and deck'd with golden manes.

Refulgent arms his mighty limbs infold,

Immortal arms, of adamant and gold.

He mounts the car, the golden scourge applies,

He sits superior, and the chariot slies:

His whirling wheels the glassy surface sweep;

Th' enormous monsters rolling o'er the deep,

Gambol around him on the watry way;

And heavy whales in aukward measures play:

45

The sea subsiding spreads a level plain,

Exults, and owns the monarch of the main;

V. 43. Th' enormous monsters rolling o'er the deep.] This description of Neptune rises upon us; his passage by water is yet more pompous than that by land. The God driving thro' the seas, the whales acknowledging him, and the waves rejoicing and making way for their monarch, are full of that marvellous so natural to the imagination of our Author. And I cannot but think the verses of Virgil in the fifth Æneid are short of his original:

Cæruleo per summa levis volat æquora curru: Subsidunt undæ, tumidumque sub axe tonanti Sternitur æquor aquis: sugiunt vasto æthere nimbi. Tum variæ comitum facies, immania cete, &c.

I fancy Scaliger himself was sensible of this, by his passing in silence a passage which lay so obvious to comparison.

The

1

75

On

The parting waves before his coursers fly; The wond'ring waters leave his axle dry.

Deep in the liquid regions lies a cave, 50 Between where Tenedos the furges lave, And rocky Imbrus breaks the rolling wave: There the great ruler of the azure round Stop'd his fwift chariot, and his fleeds unbound, Fed with ambrofial herbage from his hand, 55 And link'd their fetlocks with a golden band, Infrangible, immortal: There they flay. The father of the floods pursues his way: Where, like a tempest dark'ning heav'n around, Or fiery deluge that devours the ground, 60 Th' impatient Trojans, in a gloomy throng, Embattel'd roll'd, as Hector rush'd along, To the loud tumult and the barb'rous cry, The heav'ns re-echo, and the shores reply; They vow destruction to the Grecian name, 65 And, in their hopes, the fleets already flame.

But Neptune, rising from the seas prosound,
The God whose earthquakes rock the solid ground,
Now wears a mortal form; like Calchas seen,
Such his loud voice, and such his manly mein;
His shouts incessant ev'ry Greek inspire,
But most th' Ajaces, adding fire to fire.

'Tis yours, O warriors, all our hopes to raife; Oh recollect your ancient worth and praise! 'Tis yours to save us, if you cease to sear; Flight, more than shameful, is destructive here. On other works tho' Troy with fury fall,
And pour her armies o'er our batter'd wall;
There, Greece has strength: but this, this part o'erthrown,

Her strength were vain; I dread for you alone. 80.

Here Hedor rages like the force of fire,

Vaunts of his Gods, and calls high Jove his fire.

If yet some heav'nly pow'r your breast excite,

Breathe in your hearts, and string your arms to fight,

V. 79. --- This part o'erthrozon,

Her strength were vain; I dread for you alone.] What address, and, at the same time, what strength is there in these words? Neptune tells the two Ajaces, that he is only asraid for their post, and that the Greeks will perish by that gate, since it is Hector who assaults it: at every other quarter, the Trojans will be repulsed. It may therefore be properly said, that the Ajaces only are vanquished, and that their deseat draws destruction upon all the Greeks. I don't think that any thing better could be invented to animate courageous men, and make them attempt even impossibilities. Dacier.

V. 83. If yet some heavinly pow'r, &c.] Here Neptune, considering how the Greeks were discouraged by the knowledge that Jupiter assisted Hedor, insinuates, that notwithstanding Hedor's considence in that assistance, yet the power of some other God might countervail it on their part; wherein he alludes to his own aiding them, and seems not to doubt his ability in contesting the point with Jove himself. 'Tis with the same considence he afterwards speaks to Iris, of himself and his power, when he refuses to submit to the order of Jupiter in the sisteenth book. Eustathius remarks, what an incentive it must be to the Ajaces, to hear those who could stand against Hedor equalled, in this oblique manner, to the Gods themselves.

Greece

Greece yet may live, her threat'ned fleet maintain, 85 And Hestor's force, and Jove's own aid, be vain.

Then with his sceptre that the deep controuls,
He touch'd the chiefs, and steel'd their manly souls:
Strength, not their own, the touch divine imparts,
Prompts their light limbs, and swells their daring hearts.
Then, as a falcon from the rocky height,
Her quarry seen, impetuous at the sight,
Forth-springing instant, darts herself from high,
Shoots on the wing, and skims along the sky:
Such, and so swift, the Pow'r of Ocean slew;
The wide horizon shut him from their view.

Th' inspiring God, Oileus' active son Perceiv'd the first, and thus to Telamon.

Some God, my friend, some God in human form
Fav'ring descends, and wills to stand the storm:
Not Calchas this, the venerable seer,
Short as he turn'd, I saw the Pow'r appear:

I mark'd

V.97. Th' inspiring God, O'lleus' active son.—Perceiv'd the first.] The reason has been asked, why the lesser Ajax is the first to perceive the assistance of the God? And the ancient solution of this question was very ingenious: They said that the greater Ajax, being slow of apprehension, and naturally valiant, could not be sensible so soon of this accession of strength as the other, who immediately perceived it, as not owing so much to his natural courage.

V. 102. Short as he turn'd, I faw the pow'r.] This opinion, that the majesty of the Gods was such that they could not be seen face to face by men, seems to have

I mark'd his parting, and the steps he trod; His own bright evidence reveals a God. Ev'n now some energy divine I share, 105 And feem to walk on wings, and tread in air! With equal ardour, (Telamon returns) My foul is kindled, and my bosom burns; New rifing spirits all my force alarm, Lift each impatient limb, and brace my arm. This ready arm, unthinking, shakes the dart; The blood pours back, and fortifies my heart; Singly, methinks, yon' tow'ring chief I meet, And stretch the dreadful Hector at my feet. Full of the God that urg'd their burning breaft, The heroes thus their mutual warmth express'd. Neptune meanwhile the routed Greeks inspir'd; Who breathless, pale, with length of labours tir'd, Pant in the ships; while Troy to conquest calls, And fwarms victorious o'er their yielding walls: 120 Trembling before th' impending storm they lie, While tears of rage stand burning in their eye. Greece funk they thought, and this their fatal hour; But breathe new courage as they feel the Pow'r.

have been generally received in most nations. Spondanus observes, that it might be derived from sacred truth, and sounded upon what God says to Moses in Exodus, ch. 33. v. 20, 23. Man shall not see me and live: Thou shalt see my back parts, but my face thou shalt not behold. For the farther particulars of this notion among the Heathens, see the notes on lib. 1. v. 268. and on the 5th, v. 971.

Teucer

Teucer and Leitus first his word excite;	125
Then stern Peneleus rises to the fight;
Thoas, Deipyrus, in arms renown'd,
And Merion next, th' impulsive fury found;
Last Neftor's fon the same bold ardour takes,
While thus the God the martial fire awakes.	130
Oh lasting infamy, oh dire disgrace
To chiefs of vig'rous youth, and manly race!
I trusted in the Gods, and you, to see
Brave Greece victorious, and her navy free:	toul
Ah no-the glorious combat you disclaim,	135
And one black day clouds all her former fame.

V. 131. The speech of Neptune to the Greeks. After Neptune in his former discourse to the Ajaces, who yet maintained a retreating fight, had encouraged them to withstand the attack of the Trojans; he now addresses himself to those, who having fled out of the battle, and retired to the ships, had given up all for lost. These he endeavours to bring again to the engagement, by one of the most noble and spirited speeches in the whole Iliad. He represents that their present miserable condition, was not to be imputed to their want of power, but to their want of resolution to withstand the enemy, whom by experience they had often found unable to refift them. But what is particularly artful, while he is endeavouring to prevail upon them, is, that he does not attribute their present dejection of mind to a cowardly spirit, but to a resentment and indignation of their General's usage of their favourite hero Achilles. With the same softning art, he scorns to speak thus to cowards, but is only concerned for their misbehaviour as they are the bravest of the army. He then exhorts them for their own fake to avoid destruction, which would certainly be inevitable, if for a moment longer they delayed to oppose so imminent a danger. Heav'ns!

Heav'ns! what a prodigy these eyes survey, Unfeen, unthought, till this amazing day! Fly we at length from Troy's oft-conquer'd bands? And falls our fleet by fuch inglorious hands? A rout undisciplin'd, a straggling train, Not born to glories on the dufty plain; Like frighted fawns from hill to hill pursu'd, A prey to ev'ry favage of the wood; Shall these, so late who trembled at your name, Invade your camps, involve your ships in flame? A change so shameful, say what cause has wrought? The foldiers baseness, or the general's fault? Fools! will ye perish for your leader's vice? The purchase infamy, and life the price! 150 Tis not your cause, Achilles' injur'd fame : Another's is the crime, but your's the shame. Grant that our chief offend thro' rage or luft, Must you be cowards, if your King's unjust? Prevent this evil and your country fave: 155 Small thought retrieves the spirits of the brave.

Think,

V. 141. Arout undisciplin'd, &c.] I translate this line,
"Αυθως ηλάσκυσαι, ἀνάλκιδες, ἐδ' ἐπὶ χάρμη, with allusion to the want of military discipline among the Barbarians, so often hinted at in Homer. He is always opposing to this, the exact and regular disposition of his Greeks, and accordingly a few lines after, we are told that the Grecian phalanxes were such, that Mars or Minerwa could not have found a defect in them.

V.155. Prevent this evil, &c.] The verse in the original.

Think, and subdue! on dastards dead to same
I waste no anger, for they seel no shame:
But you, the pride, the slow'r of all our host,
My heart weeps blood to see your glory lost!

Nor deem this day, this battle, all you lose;
A day more black, a fate more vile, ensues.
Let each restect, who prizes same or breath,
On endless insamy, on instant death.
For lo! the sated time, th' appointed shore;
Hark! the gates burst, the brazen barriers roar!
Impetuous Hedor thunders at the wall;
The hour, the spot, to conquer or to fall.

These words the Grecians fainting hearts inspire,
And list'ning armies catch the godlike fire.

170

'Αλλ' ἀκεώμεθα θᾶσσον, ἀκεςαί τοι φρένες ἐσθλῶν, may be capable of receiving another sense to this effect. "If it be your resentment of Agamemnon's usage "of Achilles, that withholds you from the battle, that "evil, (viz. the dissention of those two chiefs) may "soon be remedied, for the minds of good men are easi- by calmed and composed. I had once translated it,

Their future strife with speed we shall redress, For noble minds are soon compos'd to peace.

But upon confidering the whole context more attentively, the other explanation (which is that of Dydimus) appeared to me the more natural and unforced, and I have accordingly followed it.

Fix'd at his post was each bold Ajax found, With well-rang'd squadrons strongly circled round:

V. 171. Fix'd at his post was each bold Ajax found, &c.] We must here take notice of an old story, which, however groundless and idle it feems, is related by Plutarch, Philostratus and others: "Ganictor the fon of " Amphidamus king of Eubaa, celebrating with all so-" lemnity the funeral of his father, proclaimed ac-" cording to custom several publick games, among " which was the prize for poetry. Homer and Hefiod " came to dispute for it. After they had produced se-" veral pieces on either fide, in all which the audi-" ence declared for Homer, Panides, the brother of the " deceased, who sate as one of the judges, ordered " each of the contending Poets to recite that part of " his works which he esteemed the best. Hestod re-" peated those lines which make the beginning of his " fecond book, Πληϊάδων ἀτλαγενέων ἐπίλελλομενάων, Αρχεσθ' ἀμήτε ἀρότοιο τὲ δυσσομενάων, &cc.

" Homer answered with the verses which follow here: " But the Prince preferring the peaceful subject of " Hefiod to the martial one of Homer, contrary to the " expectation of all, adjudged the prize to Heffed." The Commentators upon this occasion are very rhetorical, and universally exclaim against so crying a piece of injustice: All the hardest names which learning can furnish, are very liberally bestowed upon poor Panides. Spondanus is mighty smart, calls him Midas, takes him by the ear, and asks the dead Prince as many insulting questions, as any of his Author's own Heroes could have done. Dacier with all gravity tells us, that posterity proved a more equitable judge than Panides. And if I had not told this tale in my turn, I must have incurred the censure of all the Schoolmasters in the nation.

ाराज्य ५०५४३ व्यक्ति ह

So close their order, so dispos'd their fight,
As Pallas' self might view with fixt delight;
Or had the God of war inclin'd his eyes,
The God of war had own'd a just surprize.
A chosen Phalanx, firm, resolv'd as Fate,
Descending Hetter and his battle wait.

An

V. 173. So close their order, &c.] When Homer retouches the same subject, he has always the art to rise in his ideas above what he said before. We shall find an instance of it in this place; if we compare this manner of commending the exact discipline of an army, with what he had made use of on the same occasion at the end of the fourth Iliad. There it is said, that the most experienced warrior could not have reprehended any thing, had he been led by Pallas through the battle; but here he carries it farther, in assirming that Pallas and the God of War themselves must have admired this disposition of the Grecian forces. Eustathius.

V. 177. A chosen Phalanx, firm, &c.] Homer in these lines has given us a description of the ancient Phalanx, which confifted of feveral ranks of men closely ranged in this order. The first line stood with their spears levelled directly forward; the fecond rank being armed with spears two cubits longer, levelled them likewife forward through the interstices of the first; and the third in the same manner held forth their spears yet longer, through the two former ranks; so that the points of the spears of three ranks terminated in one line. All the other ranks stood with their spears erected, in a readiness to advance, and fill the vacant places of such as fell. This is the account Eustathius gives of the Phalanx, which he observes was only fit for a body of men acting on the defensive, but improper for the attack: And accordingly Homer here only deAn iron scene gleams dreadful o'er the sields,
Armour in armour lock'd, and shields in shields,
Spears lean on spears, on targets targets throng,
Helms stuck to helms, and man drove man along.
The floating plumes unnumber'd wave above,
As when an earthquake stirs the nodding grove;
And levell'd at the skies with pointing rays,
Their brandish'd lances at each motion blaze.

Thus breathing death, in terrible array,
The close-compacted legions urg'd their way:
Fierce they drove on, impatient to destroy;
Troy charg'd the first, and Hedor first of Troy.
As from some mountain's craggy forehead torn,
A rock's round fragment slies with sury borne,

(Which

190

fcribes the Greeks ordering their battle in this manner, when they had no other view but to stand their ground against the surious assault of the Trojans. The same Commentator observes from Hermolytus, an ancient writer of Tacticks, that this manner of ordering the Phalanx was afterwards introduced among the Spartans by Lycurgus, among the Argives by Lysander, among the Thebans by Epaminondas, and among the Macedanians by Charidemus.

V. 191. As from some mountains craggy forehead torn, &c.] This is one of the noblest similies in all Homer, and the most justly corresponding in its circumstances to the thing described. The surious descent of Hector from the wall represented by a stone that slies from the top of a rock, the hero pushed on by the superior force of Jupiter, as the stone driven by a torrent; the ruins of the wall falling after him, all things yielding before him, the clamour and tumult around him, all imaged

SCHOOL STANKE WAR

(Which from the stubborn stone a torrent rends)
Precipitate the pond'rous mass descends:

From

imaged in the violent bounding and leaping of the ftone, the crackling of the woods, the shock, the noise, the rapidity, the irrelistibility, and the augmentation of force in its progress: All these points of likene's make but the first part of this admirable simile. Then the fudden stop of the stone when it comes to the plain, as if Hector at the phalanx of the Ajaces (alluding also to the natural fituation of the ground, Hector rushing down the declivity of the shore, and being stopped on the level of the sea:) And lastly, the immobility of both when fo stopped, the enemy being as unable to move him back, as he to get forward: This last branch of the comparison is the happiest in the world, and though not hitherto obferved, is what methinks makes the principal beauty and force of it. The fimile is copied by Virgil, Aneid 12.

Ac veluti montis saxum de vertice præceps, Cum ruit avulsum vento, seu turbidus imber Proluit, aut amnis solvit sublapsa vetustas: Fertur in abruptum magno mons improbus actu Exultatque solo; sylvas, armenta, virosque Involvens secum. Disjecta per agmina Turnus Sic urbis ruit ad muros—

And Taffo has again copied it from Virgil in his 18th book.

Qual gran fasso tal bor, che o la vecchiezza Solve da un monte, o svelle ira de 'venti Ruionosa dirupa, e porta, e spezza Le selve, e con le case anco gli armenti Tal giu trahea de la sublime altezza L'horribil trave e merli, e arme, e gente, From steep to steep the rolling ruin bounds;
At ev'ry shock the crackling wood resounds;
Still gath'ring force, it smoaks; and, urg'd amain,
Whirls, leaps, and thunders down, impetuous to the plain.

There stops---So Hedor. Their whole force he prov'd Resistless when he rag'd, and when he stop'd, unmov'd.

On him the war is bent, the darts are shed,

And all their faulchions wave around his head:

Repuls'd he stands, nor from his stand retires;

But with repeated shouts his army fires.

Die la torre a quel moto une, o duo crolli; Tremar le mura, e rimbombaro i colli.

It is but justice to Homer to take notice how infinitely inferior both these similes are to their original. They have taken the image without the likeness, and lost those corresponding circumstances which raise the just-ness and sublimity of Homer's. In Virgil it is only the violence of Turnus in which the whole application consists: And in Tasso it has no other allusion than to the fall of a tower in general.

There is yet another beauty in the numbers of this part. As the verses themselves make us see, the sound of them makes us hear, what they represent; in the noble roughness, rapidity, and sonorous cadence that diftinguishes them.

. "Ρέζας, ἀσπέτω ομιβρω αναιδέος έχμαλα πέτρης, &c.

The translation, however short it falls of these beauties, may serve to shew the reader, that there was at least an endeavour to imitate them.

Trojans!

第二十分 医电子性线

Trojans! be firm; this arm shall make your way 205 Thro' yon' square body, and that black array:
Stand, and my spear shall rout their scattering pow'r,
Strong as they seem, embattel'd like a tow'r.
For he that Juno's heav'nly bosom warms,
The first of Gods, this day inspires our arms.

He faid, and rous'd the foul in ev'ry breast;
Urg'd with desire of same, beyond the rest,
Forth march'd Deiphobus; but marching held,
Before his wary steps, his ample shield.
Bold Merion aim'd a stroke (nor aim'd it wide)
The glitt'ring jav'lin pierc'd the tough bull-hide;
But pierc'd not thro': Unfaithful to his hand,
The point broke short, and sparkled in the sand.
The Trojan warrior, touch'd with timely sear,
On the rais'd orb to distance bore the spear:

220
The Greek retreating mourn'd his frustrate blow,
And curs'd the treach'rous lance that spar'd a foe;
Then to the ships with surly speed he went,
To seek a surer jav'lin in his tent.

Meanwhile with rising rage the battle glows,
The tumult thickens, and the clamour grows.
By Teucer's arm the warlike Imbrius bleeds,
The son of Mentor, rich in gen'rous steeds.
Ere yet to Trey the sons of Greece were led,
In fair Pedæus' verdant pastures bred,
The youth had dwelt; remote from war's alarms,
And bless'd in bright Medesicaste's arms:

(This

(This nymph, the fruit of Priam's ravish'd joy, Ally'd the warrior to the house of Troy.) To Troy, when glory call'd his arms, he came, 235 And match'd the bravest of her chiefs in fame: With Priam's fons, a guardian of the throne, He liv'd, belov'd and honour'd as his own. Him Teucer pierc'd between the throat and ear: He groans beneath the Telamonian spear. 240 As from some far-seen mountain's airy crown, Subdu'd by steel, a tall ash tumbles down, And foils its verdant treffes on the ground: So falls the youth; his arms the fall refound. Then Teucer rushing to despoil the dead, From Hector's hand a shining jav'lin fled: He faw, and shun'd the death; the forceful dart Sung on, and pierc'd Amphimachus his heart, Cteatus' fon, of Neptune's forceful line; Vain was his courage, and his race divine! 250 Prostrate he falls; his clanging arms resound, And his broad buckler thunders on the ground. To feize his beamy helm the victor flies, And just had fast'ned on the dazzling prize, When Ajax' manly arm a jav'lin flung; 255 Full on the shield's round boss the weapon rung; He felt the shock, nor more was doom'd to feel, Secure in mail, and sheath'd in shining steel.

Repuls'd

We the winds the Repuls'd he yields; the victor Greeks obtain The spoils contested, and bear off the slain. 260 Between the leaders of th' Athenian line, (Stichius the brave, Menestheus the divine) Deplor'd Amphimachus, sad object! lies; Imbrius remains the fierce Ajaces' prize. As two grim lions bear across the lawn, 265 Snatch'd from devouring hounds, a flaughter'd fawn, In their fell jaws high lifting thro' the wood, And sprinkling all the shrubs with drops of blood; So these the chief: Great Ajax from the dead Strips his bright arms, Oileus lops his head: 270 Toss'd like a ball, and whirl'd in air away. At Hector's feet the hoary vifage lay.

The God of Ocean fir'd with stern disdain,
And pierc'd with sorrow for his * grandson slain,
Inspires the Grecian hearts, confirms their hands,
And breathes destruction to the Trojan bands.
Swift as a whirlwind rushing to the fleet,
He finds the lance-sam'd Idomen of Crete;

His

* Amphimachus.

V. 278. Idomen of Crete.] Idomeneus appears at large in this book, whose character (if I take it right) is such as we see pretty often in common life: A person of the first rank, sufficient enough of his high birth, growing into years, conscious of his want of strength and active qualities; and therefore endeavouring to make it up to himself in dignity, and to preserve the Vol. IV.

His pensive brow the gen'rous care exprest
With which a wounded soldier touch'd his breast; 280.
Whom in the chance of war a jav'lin tore,
And his sad comrades from the battle bore;

Him

The true picture of a stiff old veneration of others. foldier, not willing to lofe any of the reputation he has acquired; yet not inconfiderate in danger; but by the fense of his age, and by his experience in battle, become too cautious to engage with any great odds against him: Very careful and tender of his foldiers, whom he had commanded fo long that they were become old acquaintance; (so that it was with great judgment Homer chose to introduce him here, in performing a kind office to one of them who was wounded.) Talkative upon subjects of war, as afraid that others might lose the memory of what he had done in better days, of which the long conversation of Meriones, and Ajax's reproach to him in Il. 23. v. 478. of the original are fufficient proofs. One may observe some strokes of lordliness and state in his character: That respect Agamemnon feems careful to treat him with, and the particular distinctions shewn him at table, are mentioned in a manner that infinuates they were points upon which this Prince not a little infifted. Il. 4. v. 296, &c. The vaunting of his family in this book, together with his farcasms and contemptuous railleries on his dead enemies, favour of the same turn of mind. And it seems there was among the ancients a tradition of Idomeneus, which strengthens this conjecture of his pride: For we find in the Heroicks of Philostratus, that before he would come to the Trojan war, he demanded a share in the fovereign command with Agamemnon himfelf.

I must, upon this occasion, make an observation once for all, which will be applicable to many passages in Homer, and afford a solution of many difficulties. It is, that our Author drew several of his characters with an eye to the histories then known of famous persons, or

the

ŀ

ir

W

eq

Mo

ap

boo

not

Wei

Him to the Surgeons of the camp he fent;
That office paid, he issu'd from his tent,
Fierce for the fight: To him the God begun,
In Thoa's voice, Andramon's valiant son,
Who rul'd where Calydon's white rocks arise,
And Pleuron's chalky cliffs emb aze the skies.

the traditions that past in those times. One cannot believe otherwise of a Poet who appears to nicely exact in observing all the customs of the age he described; nor can we imagine the infinite number of minute circumstances relating to particular persons, which we meet with every where in his poem, could possibly have been invented purely as ornaments to it. tion will account for a hundred feeming Oddnesses not only in the characters, but in the speeches of the Iliad: For as no author is more true than Homer to the character of the person he introduces speaking, so no one more often fuits his oratory to the character of the person spoken to. Many of these beauties must needs be lost to us, yet this supposition will give a new light to several particulars. For instance, the speech I have been mentioning of Agamemnon to Idomeneus in the 4th book, wherein he puts this hero in mind of the magnificent entertainments he had given him, becomes in this view much less odd and furprizing. Or who can tell but it had some allusion to the manners of the Cretans whom he commanded, whose character was so well known, as to become a proverb: The Cretans, evil beafts, and flow bellies.

V. 283. The Surgeons of the camp.] Podalirius and Machaon were not the only physicians in the army; it appears from some passages in the poem, that each body of troops had one peculiar to themselves. It may not be improper to advertise, that the ancient Physicians were all Surgeons. Eustathius.

S

e

d

e

e n

s,

or

Where's now th' impetuous vaunt, the daring boast
Of Greece victorious, and proud Ilion lost?

290

To whom the King. On Greece no blame be thrown, Arms are her trade, and war is all her own. Her hardy heroes from the well-fought plains Nor fear with-holds, nor shameful sloth detains, 'Tis Heav'n, alas! and Jove's all-pow'rful doom, 295 That far, far distant from our native home Wills us to fall, inglorious! Oh my friend! Once foremost in the fight, still prone to lend Or arms, or counsels; now perform thy best, And what thou canst not fingly, urge the rest. 300 Thus he; and thus the God, whose force can make The folid globe's eternal basis shake. Ah! never may he fee his native land, But feed the vultures on this hateful strand, Who feeks ignobly in his ships to stay, 305 Nor dares to combat on this fignal day! For this, behold! in horrid arms I shine, And urge thy foul to rival acts with mine; Together let us battle on the plain; Two, not the worst; nor ev'n this succour vain: Not vain the weakest, if their force unite; But ours, the bravest have confess'd in fight. This faid, he rushes where the combat burns; Swift to his tent the Cretan King returns. From thence, two jav'lins glitt'ring in his hand, And clad in arms that lighten'd all the ftrand,

Fierce

Fierce on the foe th' impetuous hero drove; Like light'ning burfting from the arm of Jove, Which to pale man the wrath of heav'n declares, Or terrifies th' offending world with wars; 320 In streamy sparkles, kindling all the skies, From pole to pole the trail of glory flies. Thus his bright armour o'er the dazzled throng Gleam'd dreadful as the Monarch flash'd along. Him, near his tent, Meriones attends; 325 Whom thus he questions: Ever best of friends!

O fay,

V. 325. — Meriones attends, Whom thus he questions— This conversation between Idomeneus and Meriones is generally censured as highly improper and out of place, and as such is given up by M. Dacier, the most zealous of our Poet's defenders. However, if we look closely into the occasion and drift of this difcourse the accusation will, I believe, appear not so well grounded. Two persons of distinction, just when the enemy is put to a stop by the Ajaces, meet behind the army: Having each on important occasions retired out of the fight, the one to help a wounded foldier, the other to feek a new weapon. Idomeneus, who is superior in years as well as authority, returning to the battle, is surprized to meet Meriones out of it, who was one of his own officers (θεράπων, as Homer here calls him) and being jealous of his foldier's honour, demands the caute of his quitting the fight. Meriones having told him it was the want of a spear, he yet feems unfatisfied with the excuse; adding that he himfelf did not approve of that distant manner of fighting with a spear. Meriones being touched to the quick with this reproach, replies, that he, of all the Greeks, had the least reason to suspect his courage: Whereupon Ido-

meneus

O say, in ev'ry art of battle skill'd,
What holds thy courage from so brave a field?
On some important message art thou bound,
Or bleeds my friend by some unhappy wound?

Inglorious here, my soul abhors to stay,
And glows with prospects of th' approaching day.

O Prince! (Meriones replies) whose care
Leads forth th' embattel'd sons of Crete to war;
This speaks my gries: this headless lance I wield: 335
The rest lies rooted in a Trojan shield.

To whom the Cretan: Enter, and receive The wanted weapons; those my tent can give;

meneus perceiving him highly piqued, assures him he entertains no such hard thoughts of him, since he had often known his courage prov'd on such occasions, where the danger being greater, and the number smaller, it was impossible for a coward to conceal his natural infirmity: But now recollecting that a malicious mind might give a finister interpretation to their inactivity during this discourse, he immediately breaks it off upon that reslection. As therefore this conversation has its rise from a jealousy in the most tender point of honour, I think the Poet cannot justly be blamed for suffering a discourse so full of warm sentiments to run on for about forty verses; which, after all, cannot be supposed to take up more than two or three minutes from action.

V. 335 This headless lance, &c.] We have often seen several of Homer's combatants lose and break their spears, yet they do not therefore retire from the battle to seek other weapons; why therefore does Homer here send Meriones on this errand? It may be said, that in the kind of fight which the Greeks now maintained drawn up into the phalanx, Meriones was useless without this weapon.

Spears

Spears I have store, (and Trojan lances all)
That shed a lustre round th' illumin'd wall.
Tho' I, disdainful of the distant war,
Nor trust the dart, or aim th' uncertain spear,

V. 339. Spears I have store, &c.] Idomeneus describes his tent as a magazine, stored with variety of arms won from the enemy, which were not laid up as useless trophies of his victories, but kept there in order to supply his own, and his friends occasions. And this consideration shews us one reason why these warriors contended with such eagerness to carry off the arms of a vanquish'd enemy.

This gives me an occasion to animadvert upon a false remark of Eustathius, which is inferted in the notes on the 11th book, "that Homer, to shew us nothing is so " unseasonable in a battle as to stay to despoil the slain, " feigns that most of the warriors who do it, are killed, " wounded, or unsuccessful." I am astonished how so great a mistake should fall from any man who had read Homer, much more from one who had read him fo thoroughly, and even superstitiously, as the old Archbishop of Thessalonica. There is scarce a book in Homer that does not abound with instances of the contrary, where the conquerors strip their enemies, and bear off their spoils in triumph. It was (as I have already faid in the Essay upon Homer's battles) as honourable an exploit in those days to carry off the arms, as it is now to gain a standard. But it is a strange consequence, that because our author sometimes represents a man unfuccessful in a glorious attempt, he therefore discommends the attempt itself; and is as good an argument against encountring an enemy living, as against despoiling him dead. One ought not to confound this with plundering, between which Homer has fo well marked the diffinction; when he constantly speaks of the spoils as glorious, but makes Nestor in the 6th book and Hector in the 15th, directly forbid the pillage, as a practice that has often proved fatal in the midst of a victory, and sometimes even after it.

B 4

Yet hand to hand I fight, and spoil the slain;
And thence these trophies, and these arms I gain.

Enter, and see on heaps the helmets roll'd, 345
And high hung spears, and shields that slame with goldNor vain (said Merton) are our martial toils;
We too can boast of no ignoble spoils.

But those my ship contains, whence distant far,
I fight conspicuous in the van of war. 350
What need I more? If any Greek there be
Who knows not Merion, I appeal to thee.
To this, Idomeneus. The fields of fight,
Have prov'd thy valour, and unconquer'd might;
And where some ambush for the soes design'd, 355

V. 353. To this, Idomeneus.] There is a great deal more dialogue in Homer, than Virgil. The Roman Poet's are generally fet speeches, those of the Greeks more in conversation. What Virgil does by two words of a narration, Homer brings about by a speech; he hardly raises one of his heroes out of bed without some talk concerning it. There are not only replies, but rejoinders in Homer, a thing scarce ever to be found in Virgil; the consequence whereof is, that there must be in the Iliad many continued conversations (such as this of our two heroes) a little refembling common chit-chat. This renders the poem more natural and animated, but less grave and majestick. However, that fuch was the way of writing generally practifed in those ancient times, appears from the like manner used in most of the books of the Old Testament; and it particularly agreed with our Author's warm imagination, which delighted in perpetual imagery, and in painting every circumstance of what he described.

Ev'n there thy courage would not lag behind,

In

In that sharp service, fingled from the rest, The fear of each, or valour stands confest. No force, no firmness, the pale coward shews; He shifts his place; his colour comes and goes; A dropping sweat creeps cold on ev'ry part; Against his bosom beats his quiv'ring heart; Terror and death in his wild eye-balls stare; With chatt'ring teeth he stands, and stiff'ning hair, And looks a bloodless image of despair! 365 Not so the brave - still dauntless, still the same, Unchang'd his colour, and unmov'd his frame; Compos'd his thought, determin'd is his eye, And fix'd his foul to conquer or to die: If ought difturb the tenor of his breaft, 370 'Tis but the wish to strike before the rest.

In such essays thy blameless worth is known.

And ev'ry art of dang'rous war thy own.

By chance of fight whatever wounds you bore,

Those wounds were glorious all, and all before: 375

Such as may teach, 'twas still thy brave delight

T'oppose thy bosom where the foremost fight.

V. 357. In that sharp service, &c.] In a general battle cowardice may be the more easily concealed, by reason of the number of the combatants; but in an ambuscade, where the soldiers are sew, each must be discovered to be what he is: this is the reason why the ancients entertained so great an idea of this sort of war; the bravest men were always chosen to serve upon such occasions. Eustathius.

Bs

But

But why, like infants, cold to honour's charms, Stand we to talk, when glory calls to arms? Go—from my conquer'd spears, the choicest take, 380 And to their owners send them nobly back.

Swift as the word bold Merion snatch'd a spear,
And breathing slaughter follow'd to the war.
So Mars armipotent invades the plain,
(The wide destroyer of the race of man)
385

Terror.

V. 384. So Mars armipotent, &c.] Homer varies his fimilitudes with all imaginable art, fometimes deriving them from the properties of animals, fometimes from natural passions, fometimes from the occurrences of life, and sometimes (as in the simile before us) from history. The invention of Mars's passage from Thrace (which was seigned to be the country of that God) to the Phlegyans and Ephyrians, is a very beautiful and poetical manner of celebrating the martial genius of that people, who lived in perpetual wars.

Methinks there is something of a fine enthusiasm, in Homer's manner of setching a compass, as it were, to draw in new images, besides those in which the direct point of likeness consists. Milton perfectly well understood the beauty of these digressive images, as we may see from the following simile, which is in a manner made up of them.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks

In Vallombrofa (where th' Etrurian shades

· High over-arch'd embow'r.) Or scatter'd sedge

Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion arm'd

* Hath vex'd the Red sea coast, (whose wave o'erthrew

· Bufiris and his Memphian cavalry,

· While with perfidious hatred they pursu'd

. The fojourners of Goshen, who beheld

· From

Terror, his best lov'd son, attends his course,
Arm'd with stern boldness, and enormous force;
The pride of haughty warriors to consound,
And lay the strength of tyrants on the ground:
From Thrace they sty, call'd to the dire alarms
Of warring Phlegyans, and Ephyrian arms!
Invok'd by both, relentless they dispose
To these glad conquest, murd'rous rout to those.
So march'd the leaders of the Cretan train,
And their bright arms shot horror o'er the plain.
Then sirst spake Merion: Shall we join the right,
Or combat in the centre of the fight?

Or,

' From the fafe shore their floating carcasses;

' And broken chariot-wheels) -So thick bestrown

Abject and loft lay thefe .-

As for the general purport of this comparison of Homer, it gives us a noble and majestick idea, at once of Idomeneus and Meriones, represented by Mars and his son Terror; in which each of these heroes is greatly elevated, yet the just distinction between them preserved. The beautiful simile of Virgil in his 12th Eneid is drawn with an eye to this of our Author.

Qualis apud gelidi cùm flumina concitus Hebri Sanguineus Mawors, clypeo, increpat, atque furentes Bella movens immittit equos; illi æquore aperto Ante Notos Zephyrumque volant: gemit ultima pulsu Thraca pedum: circumque atræ Formidinis ora, Iræque, Infidiæque, Dei comitatus, aguntur.

V. 396. — Shall we join the right,

Or combat in the centre of the fight,

Or to the left our wanted succour lead?

The

Or, to the left, our wanted succour lend? Hazard and fame all parts alike attend.

Not in the centre, (Idomen reply'd) Our ablest chieftains the main battle guide; Each godlike Ajax makes that post his care, And gallant Teucer deals destruction there: Skill'd, or with shafts to gall the distant field,

Or bear close battle on the founding shield.

The common interpreters have to this question of Meriones given a meaning which is highly impertinent, if not downright nonfense; explaining it thus. Shall we fight on the right, or in the middle; or on the left, for no where else do the Greeks so much want affistance; which amounts to this: " Shall we engage where our " affistance is most wanted?" The context, as well as the words of the original, oblige us to understand it in this obvious meaning; Shall we bring our assistance to the right, to the left, or to the centre? Since the Greeks, being equally pressed and engaged on all sides, equally need our aid on all parts.

V. 400. Not in the centre, &c.] There is in this anfwer of Idomeneus a small circumstance which is overlooked by the commentators, but in which the whole spirit and reason of what is said by him consists. He favs he is in no fear of the centre, fince it is defended by Teucer and Ajax: Teucer being not only most famous for the use of the bow, but likewise excellent er sadin voulin, in a close standing fight: And as for Ajax, tho' not so swift of foot as Achilles, yet he was equal to him ev abrogadin, in the same stedfast manner of fighting; hereby plainly intimating that he was fecure for the centre, because that post was defended by two persons both accomplished in that part of war, which was most necessary for the service they were then engaged in; the two expressions before mentioned peculiarly fignifying a firm and fleady way of fighting, most useful in maintaining a post.

Thefe

计自分 国经外国市 随口电

These can the rage of haughty Hestor tame,
Safe in their arms, the navy sears no slame;
Till Jove himself descends, his bolts to shed,
And hurl the blazing ruin at our head.
Great must he be, of more than human birth,
Nor fed like mortals on the fruits of earth,
Him neither rocks can crush, nor steel can wound,
Whom Ajax sells not on th' ensanguin'd ground.
In standing sight he meets Achilles' force,
Excell'd alone in swistness in the course.

Then to the lest our ready arms apply,
And live with glory, or with glory die.

He faid; and Merion to th' appointed place, Fierce as the God of battles, urg'd his pace. Soon as the foe the shining chiefs beheld 420 Rush like a fiery torrent round the field, Their force embody'd in a tide they pour; The rifing combat founds along the shore: As warring winds, in Sirius' fultry reign, From different quarters sweep the sandy plain; On ev'ry fide the dufty whirlwinds rife, And the dry fields are lifted to the skies: Thus by despair, hope, rage, together driv'n, Met the black hofts, and meeting, darken'd heav'n. All dreadful glar'd the iron face of war, 430 Briftled with upright spears, that flash'd afar;

Dire

Dire was the gleam of breast-plates, helms and shields, And polish'd arms emblaz'd the flaming fields; Tremendous scene that gen'ral horror gave, But touch'd with joy the bosom of the brave. Saturn's great Sons in fierce contention vy'd, And crouds of heroes in their anger dy'd, The Sire of earth and heav'n, by Thetis won To crown with glory Peleus' godlike fon, Will'd not destruction to the Grecian pow'rs, But spar'd awhile the destin'd Trojan tow'rs: When Neptune rifing from his azure main, Warr'd on the King of heav'n with stern disdain, And breath'd revenge, and fir'd the Grecian train. Gods of one fource, of one etherial race, 445 Alike divine, and heav'n their native place: But Yove's the greater; first-born of the skies, And more than Men, or Gods, supremely wife. For this, of Jove's superior might afraid, Neptune in human form conceal'd his aid. These pow'rs inclose the Greek and Trojan train In War and Discord's adamantine chain: Indiffolubly

V. 451.] It will be necessary, for the better underflanding the conduct of Homer in every battle he defcribes, to reflect on the particular kind of fight, and the circumstances which distinguish each. In this view therefore we ought to remember thro' this whole book, that the battle described in it, is a fixed close fight, wherein the armies engage in a gross compact body, without Indisfolubly strong, the fatal tye
Is stretch'd on both, and heaps on heaps they die.

Dreadful

without any skirmishes or feats of activity so often mentioned in the foregoing engagements. We see at the beginning of it the Grecians form a Phalans, v. 177. which continues unbroken at the very end, v. 1006. The chief weapon made use of is a spear, being most proper for this manner of combat; nor do we see any other use of a chariot, but to carry off the dead or wounded (as in the instance of Harpalion and Deiphobus.)

From hence we may observe with what judgment and propriety Homer introduces Idomeneus as the chief in action on this occasion: For this hero being declined from his prime, and somewhat stiff with years, was only fit for this kind of engagement, as Homer expressly fays in the 512th verse of the present book.

Ου γαρ επ' εμπεδα γυια ποδών διν δρμιθέντι, Ουτ' αρ' επαίζαι μεθ' εδι βέλος, επ' αλέασθαι. Τῷ ρα καὶ εν ςαδίη μεν αμύνετο νηλεες δμαρ.

See the translation, v. 648, &c.

V. 452. In War and Discord's adamantine chain.] This short comprehensive allegory is very proper to give us an idea of the present condition of the two contending armies, who being both powerfully sustained by the assistance of superior deities, join and mix together in a close and bloody engagement, without any remarkable advantage on either side. To image to us this state of things, the poet represents Jupiter and Neptune holding the two armies bound by a mighty chain, which he calls the knot of contention and war, and of which the two Gods draw the extremities, whereby the enclosed armies are compelled together, without any possibility on either side to separate or conquer. There is not perhaps in Homer any image at once so

Dreadful in arms, and grown in combat grey, 455 The bold Idomeneus controuls the day. First by his hand Othryoneus was slain, Swell'd with false hopes, with mad ambition vain! Call'd by the voice of war to martial fame, From high Cabefus' distant walls he came; Cassandra's love he fought, with boasts of pow'r, And promis'd conquest was the proffer'd dow'r. The King confented, by his vaunts abus'd; The King confented, but the Fates refus'd. Proud of himself, and of th' imagin'd bride, 465 The field he measur'd, with a larger stride. Him as he stalk'd, the Cretan jav'lin found; Vain was his breast-plate to repel the wound: His dream of glory loft, he plung'd to hell; The plain resounded as the boaster fell. 470 The great Idomeneus bestrides the dead;

Such

t

f ai

 f_{Γ}

on wa on fer

it 1

exact and so bold. Madam Datier acknowledges, that despairing to make this passage shine in her language, she purposely omitted it in her translation: But from what she says in her annotations, it seems that she did not rightly apprehend the propriety and beauty of it. Hobbes too was not very sensible of it when he translated it so oddly:

And thus (he cries) behold the promise sped!

And thus the Saw from brother unto brothen Of cruel war was drawn alternately, And many flain on one fide and the other.

V. 471. The great Idomeneus bestrides the dead;
And thus (be cries)——]

.It

· 有限性的時間

Such is the help thy arms to Ilion bring, And such the contract of the Phrygian King!

Our

It feems (says Eustathius on this place) that the Iliad, being an heroic poem, is of too serious a nature to admit of raillery: Yet Homer has found the secret of joining two things that are in a manner incompatible. For this piece of raillery is so far from raising laughter, that it becomes a hero, and is capable to inflame the courage of all who hear it. It also elevates the character of Idomeneus, who notwithstanding he is in imminent dangers, preserves his usual gaiety of temper, which is the greatest evidence of an uncommon courage.

I confess I am of an opinion very different from this of Eustathius, which is also adopted by M. Dacier. So severe and bloody an irony to a dying person is a fault in morals, if not in poetry itself. It should not have place at all, or, it it should, is ill placed here. Idomeneus is represented a brave man, nay a man of a compassionate nature, in the circumstance he was introduced in, of affifting a wounded foldier. What provocation could fuch an one have, to infult fo barbarously an unfortunate Prince, being neither his rival nor particular enemy? True courage is inseparable from humanity, and all generous warriors regret the very victories they gain, when they reflect what a price of blood they cost. I know it may be answered, that these were not the manners of Homer's time, a spirit of violence and devastation then reigned, even among the chosen people of God, as may be seen from the actions of Joshua, &c. However, if one would forgive the cruelty, one cannot forgive the gaiety on fuch an occasion. These inhuman jests the Poet was fo far from being obliged to make, that he was on the contrary forced to break through the general serious air of this poem to introduce them. it not raise a suspicion, that (whatever we see of his fuperior

Our offers now, illustrious Prince! receive; For such an aid what will not Argos give?

475

To

fuperior genius in other respects) his own views of morality were not elevated above the barbarity of his age? I think indeed the thing by far the most shocking in this Author, is that spirit of cruelty which appears too manifestly in the Iliad.

Virgil was too judicious to imitate Homer in these licences, and is much more referved in his farcasms There are not above four or five in the and infults. whole Eneid. That of Pyrrbus to Priam in the fecond book, tho' barbarous in itself, may be accounted for, as intended to raise a character of horror, and render the action of Pyrrbus odious; whereas Homer stains his most favourite characters with these barbarities. That of Ascanius over Numanus in the ninth, was a fair opportunity where Virgil might have indulged the humour of a cruel raillery, and have been excused by the youth and gaiety of the speaker; yet it is no more than a very moderate answer to the insolences with which he had just been provoked by his enemy, only retorting two of his own words upon him.

He never suffers his Eneas to fall into this practice, but while he is on fire with indignation after the death of his friend Pallas. That short one to Mezentius is the least that could be said to such a tyrant.

—Ubi nunc Mezentius acer, & illa Effera vis animi? —

The worst-natured one I remember (which is yet more excusable than Homer's) is that of Turnus to Eumedes in the 12th book.

En,

tl

C

To conquer Troy, with ours thy forces join,
And count Atrides' fairest daughter thine.

Mean time, on farther methods to advise,
Come, follow to the fleet thy new allies;
There hear what Greece has on her part to say.

He spoke, and dragg'd the goary corse away.

This Afius view'd, unable to contain,
Before his chariot warring on the plain;
(His valu'd courfers to his fquire confign'd, Impatient panted on his neck behind)
To vengeance rifing with a fudden fpring,
He hop'd the conquest of the Cretan King.
The wary Cretan, as his foe drew near,
Full on his throat discharg'd the forceful spear:
490
Beneath the chin the point was seen to glide,
And glitter'd, extant at the farther side.
As when the mountain oak, or poplar tall,
Or Pine, sit mast for some great Admiral,

En, agros, & quam bello, Trojane, petisti, Hesperiam metire jacens: bæc præmia, qui me Ferro ausi tentare, serunt: sic mænia condunt.

V. 474. And fuch the contract of the Phrygian King, &c.] It was but natural to raise a question, on occasion of these and other passages in Homer, how it comes to pass that the heroes of different nations are so well acquainted with the stories and circumstances of each other? Eustathius's solution is no ill one, that the warriors on both sides might learn the story of their enemies from the captives they took, during the course of so long a war.

Groans

Groans to the oft-heav'd ax, with many a wound, 495 Then spreads a length of ruin o'er the ground: So funk proud Afius in that dreadful day, And stretch'd before his much-lov'd coursers lay. He grinds the dust distain'd with streaming gore, And, fierce in death, lies foaming on the shore. Depriv'd of motion, stiff with stupid fear, Stands all aghast his trembling charioteer, Nor shuns the foe, nor turns the steeds away, But falls transfix'd, an unresisting prey: Pierc'd by Antilochus, he pants beneath 505 The stately car, and labours out his breath. Thus Afius' steeds, (their mighty master gone) Remain the prize of Neftor's youthful fon. Stabb'd at the fight, Deiphobus drew nigh, And made, with force, the vengeful weapon fly: 510 The Cretan faw; and stooping, caus'd to glance, From his slope shield, the disappointed lance.

Beneath

V. 511. The Cretan faw; and stooping, &c.] Nothing could paint in a more lively manner this whole action, and every circumstance of it, than the following lines. There is the posture of Idomeneus upon seeing the lance slying towards him; the lifting the shield obliquely to turn it aside; the arm discovered in that position; the form, composition, materials, and ornaments of the shield distinctly specified; the slight of the dart over it; the sound of it first as it slew, then as it fell; and the decay of that sound on the edge of the buckler, which, being thinner than the other parts, rather tinkled than rung, especially when the first force

torce

T

fo

th

tic

 P_0

Beneath the spacious targe (a blazing round,
Thick with bull-hides, and brazen orbits bound,
On his rais'd arm by two strong braces stay'd)
He lay collected in defensive shade.
O'er his safe head the jav'lin idly sung,
And on the tinkling verge more faintly rung
Ev'n then, the spear the vig'rous arm confest,
And pierc'd, obliquely, King Hypsenor's breast: 520
Warm'd in his liver, to the ground it bore
The chief, his people's guardian now no more!
Not unattended (the proud Trojan cries)
Nor unreveng'd, lamented Asius lies:
For thee, tho' hell's black portals stand display'd, 525

Heart-piercing anguish, at the haughty boast, Touch'd ev'ry Greek, but Nestor's son the most:
Griev'd as he was, his pious arms attend,
And his broad buckler shields his slaughter'd friend;
'Till sad Mecistheus and Alastor bore 531

His honour'd body to the tented shore.

This mate shall joy thy melancholy shade.

Nor yet from fight Idomeneus withdraws; Refolv'd to perish in his country's cause, Or find some soe, whom heav'n and he shall doom 535 To wail his fate in death's eternal gloom.

force of the stroke was spent on the orb of it. All this in the compass of so few lines, in which every word is an image, is something more beautifully particular, than I remember to have met with in any Poet.

He fees Alcathous in the front aspire: Great Æfyetes was the hero's fire: His spouse Hippodame, divinely fair, Anchises' eldest hope, and darling care; 540 Who charm'd her parent's and her husband's heart, With beauty, fense, and ev'ry work of art: He once, of Ilion's youth, the lovelieft boy, The fairest she, of all the fair of Troy. By Neptune now the hapless hero dies, 545 Who covers with a cloud those beauteous eyes, And fetters ev'ry limb: yet bent to meet His fate, he stands; nor shuns the lance of Crete. Fixt as some column, or deep-rooted oak, (While the winds fleep) his breaft receiv'd the stroke. Before the pond'rous stroke his corselet yields, Long us'd to ward the death in fighting fields. The riven armour fends a jarring found: His lab'ring heart heaves with fo ftrong a bound, The long lance shakes, and vibrates in the wound: Fast

V. 543. He once, of Ilion's youth the loweliest boy.] Some manuscripts, after these words, whise in Troin insert the three following verses;

Πρὶν 'Αθηνορίδας τραφέμεν ἢ Πανθόον ῧιας Πριαμίδας θ' δι τρωσι μεταπρεπον ἱπποδάμοισιν "Εως ἐθ' ήβην εἶνεν, ὄφελλε δὲ κώριον ἄνθος ; which I have not translated, as not thinking them genuine. Mr. Barnes is of the same opinion.

V.554. His lab'ring heart heaves with so strong a bound,
The long lance shakes, and vibrates in the wound.]

We

0

T

is di T

eff

mo

mi

BOOK XIII. HOMER'S ILIAD. 43 Fast-flowing from its source, as prone he lay, 556 Life's purple tide impetuous gush'd away. Then Idomen, infulting o'er the flain, Behold, Deiphobus! nor vaunt in vain: See! on one Greek three Trojan ghosts attend, 560 This, my third victim, to the shades I send. Approaching now, thy boafted might approve, And try the prowefs of the feed of Fove. From Jove, enamour'd on a mortal dame, Great Minos guardian of his country, came: 565 Deucalion, blameless Prince! was Minos' heir; (His first-born I, the third from Jupiter:) O'er spacious Crete, and her bold sons I reign. And thence my ships transport me thro' the main ; Lord of a hoft, o'er all my hoft I shine, 570 A scourge to thee, thy father, and thy line.

We cannot read Homer without observing a wonderful variety in the wounds and manner of dying. Some of these wounds are painted with very singular circumstances, and those of uncommon art and beauty. This passage is a master-piece in that way; Alcathous is pierced into the heart, which throbs with so strong a pulse, that the motion is communicated even to the distant end of the spear, which is vibrated thereby. This circumstance might appear too bold, and the effect beyond nature, were we not informed by the most skilful Anatomists of the wonderful force of this muscle, which some of them have computed to be equal to the weight of several thousand pounds. Lower decorde. Borellus, & alii.

The Trojan heard; uncertain, or to meet
Alone, with vent'rous arms, the King of Crete;
Or feek auxiliar force; at length decreed
To call fome hero to partake the deed.

Forthwith Eneas rifes to his thought;
For him, in Troy's remotest lines, he sought,
Where he, incens'd at partial Priam, stands,
And sees superior posts in meaner hands.

To

In

nee me

"

"

" t

" a

" C

" 2

" ca

" it

" bo

V. 578. Incens'd at partial Priam, &c.] Homer here gives the reason why Eneas did not fight in the foremost ranks. It was against his inclination that he ferved Priam, and he was rather engaged by honour and reputation to affift his country, than by any dispofition to aid that Prince. This passage is purely historical, and the antients have preserved to us a tradition which serves to explain it. They say that Æneas became suspected by Priam, on account of an oracle which prophesied he should in process of time rule over the Trojans. The King therefore shewed him no great degree of esteem or consideration, with design to discredit, and render him despicable to the people. This envy of Priam, and this report of the oracle, are mentioned by Achilles to Æneas in the 20th book.

— ή σέ γε θυμός ἐμοὶ μαχέσασθαι ἀνώγει, Ἐλπόμενον Τρῶεσσιν ἀναξειν ἰπποδάμοισι, Τιμῆς τῆς Πριάμον; ἀτὰρ ἔικεν ἔμ' ἐξεναρίξης, Οὐτοι τὰνεκά γε Πρίαμος γέρας ἐνχερὶ θήσει. Βἰσὶ γὰρ οἱ παῖζες.—

(See v. 216, &c. of the translation.) And Neptune in the same book,

To him, ambitious of so great an aid, 580
The bold Deiphobus approach'd and said:

Now, Trojan Prince, employ thy pious arms,
If e'er thy bosom felt fair honour's charms.

Alcathous dies, thy brother and thy friend!

Come, and the warrior's lov'd remains defend.

Beneath his cares thy early youth was train'd,

One table fed you, and one roof contain'd.

This deed to fierce Idomeneus we owe;

Haste, and revenge it on th' insulting foe.

Eneas heard, and for a space resign'd

Eneas heard, and for a space resign'd 596
To tender pity all his manly mind;

"Ηδη γὰρ Πριάμου γενεὰν ἄχθηρε Κροτίων. Νὰν δὲ δὰ Αἰνείαο βία Τρώεσσιν ἀνάξει, Καὶ παίδες παιδῶν, τοί κεν μετόπισθε γένωνλαι. In the translation, v. 355, Ες.

I shall conclude this note with the character of Æneas, as it is drawn by Philostratus, wherein he makes mention of the same tradition. " Eneas (says this " author) was inferior to Hedor in battle only, in all " else equal, and in prudence superior. He was like-" wife skilful in whatever related to the Gods, and " conscious of what destiny had reserved for him after " the taking of Troy. Incapable of fear, never dif-" composed, and particularly possessing himself in the " article of danger. Hector is reported to have been " called the hand, and Aneas the head, of the Trojans; " and the latter more advantaged their affairs by his " caution, than the former by his fury. These two "heroes were much of the same age, and the same "stature; The air of Æneas had something in it less " bold and forward, but at the same time more fixed " and constant." Philostrat. Heroic. Vol. IV. Then

Then rifing in his rage, he burns to fight: The Greek awaits him with collected might. As the fell boar on some rough mountain's head, Arm'd with wild terrors, and to flaughter bred, When the loud rusticks rise, and shout from far, Attends the tumults, and expects the war: O'er his bent back the briftly horrors rife, Fires stream in light'ning from his sanguine eyes; His foaming tulks both dogs and men engage, 600 But most his hunters rouze his mighty rage. So stood Idomeneus, his jav'lin shook, And met the Trojan with a low'ring look. Antilochus, Deiphobus were near, The youthful offspring of the God of war: Merion, and Aphareus, in field renown'd: To these the warrior sent his voice around, Fellows in arms! your timely aid unite: Lo, great Eneas rushes to the fight: Sprung from a God, and more than mortal bold: He fresh in youth, and I in arms grown old. Else should this hand, this hour decide the strife, The great dispute, of glory, or of life. He spoke, and all as with one soul obey'd: Their lifted bucklers cast a dreadful shade 615 Around the chief. Eneas too demands. Th' affifting forces of his native bands: Paris, Deiphobus, Agenor join;

(Co-aids and captains of the Trojan line.)

In

1

L

T

T

tre

ful

tur hav

'tis fhe

what that

the

floc

free

In order follow all th' embody'd train; 620
Like Ida's flocks proceeding o'er the plain;
Before his fleecy care, erect and bold,
Stalks the proud ram, the father of the fold:
With joy the swain surveys them, as he leads
To the cool fountains, thro' the well-known meads.
So joys Æneas, as his native band 626
Moves on in rank, and stretches o'er the land.
Round dead Alcathous now the battle rose:

Round dead Alcathous now the battle role;
On ev'ry fide the steely circle grows;
Now batter'd breast-plates and hack'd helmets ring,
And o'er their heads unheeded jav'lins sing.

Above the rest, two tow'ring chiefs appear,
There great Idomeneus, Æneas here.

Like Gods of war, dispensing sate, they stood,
And burn'd to drench the ground with mutual blood.
The Trojan weapon whizz'd along in air;
636
The Cretan saw, and shun'd the brazen spear:

V. 621. Like Ida's flocks, &c.] Homer, whether he treats of the customs of men or beasts, is always a faithful interpreter of nature. When sheep leave the pasture and drink freely, it is a certain sign, that they have found good pasturage, and that they are all sound; it therefore, upon this account, that Homer says the shepherd rejoices. Homer, we find, well understood what Aristotle many ages after him remarked, vis. that sheep grow sat by drinking. This therefore is the reason why shepherds are accustomed to give their slocks a certain quantity of salt every sive days in the summer, that they may by this means drink the more freely. Eustathias.

Sent from an arm fo ftrong, the missive wood Stuck deep in earth, and quiver'd where it stood. But Oenomas receiv'd the Cretan's stroke, The forceful spear his hollow corselet broke, It ripp'd his belly with a ghaftly wound, And roll'd the smoaking entrails on the ground. Stretch'd on the plain, he fobs away his breath, And furious, grasps the bloody dust in death. The victor from his breatt the weapon tears; (His spoils he could not, for the show'r of spears.) Tho' now unfit an active war to wage, Heavy with cumb'rous arms, stiff with cold age, His liftless limbs unable for the course; 650 In standing fight he yet maintains his force: Till faint with labour, and by foes repell'd, His tir'd, flow steps, he drags along the field. Deiphobus beheld him as he past, And, fir'd with hate, a parting jav'lin cast: 655 The jav'lin err'd, but held its course along, And pierc'd Ascalaphus, the brave and young: The fon of Mars fell gasping on the ground, And gnash'd the dust all bloody with his wound.

V. 655. And, fir'd with hate. Homer does not tell us the occasion of this hatred; but, fince his days, Simonides and Thyeus write, that Idomeneus and Deiphobus were rivals, and both in love with Helen. very well agrees with the ancient tradition which Euripides and Virgil have followed: For after the death of Paris, they tell us she was espoused to Deiphobus. Eustathius.

Nor

T

T

An

Hi

Rap

To

And M Hear

Bold

As to

He p

Benea

BOOK XIII. HOMER'S ILIAD.

49

Nor knew the furious father of his fall; 660 High-thron'd amidst the great Olympian hall, On golden clouds th' immortal synod sate; Detain'd from bloody war by Jove and Fate.

Now, where in dust the breathless hero lay, For flain Ascalaphus commenc'd the fray. Deiphobus to feize his helmet flies, And from his temples rends the glitt'ring prize; Valiant as Mars, Meriones drew near, And on his loaded arm discharg'd his spear. He drops the weight, disabled with the pain; 670 The hollow helmet rings against the plain. Swift as a vulture leaping on his prey, From his torn arm the Grecian rent away The reeking jav'lin, and rejoin'd his friends, His wounded brother good Polites tends; 675 Around his waift his pious arms he threw, And from the rage of combat gently drew: Him his fwift coursers, on his splendid car, Rapt from the less'ning thunder of the war; To Troy they drove him, groaning from the shore, 680

Meanwhile fresh slaughter bathes the sanguine ground,
Heaps falls on heaps, and heav'n and earth resound.
Bold Aphareus by great Æneas bled;
As tow'rd the chief he turn'd his daring head,
He pierc'd his throat; the bending head deprest,
Beneath his helmet, nods upon his breast;

And sprinkling, as he past, the sands with gore.

His shield revers'd o'er the fall'n warrior lies; And everlafting flumber feals his eyes. Antilochus, as Thoon turn'd him round, Transpierc'd his back with a dishonest wound : The hollow vein that to the neck extends Along the chine, his eager jav'lin rends: Supine he falls, and to his focial train Spreads his imploring arms, but spreads in vain. 695 Th' exulting victor leaping where he lay, From his broad fhoulders tore the spoils away; His time observ'd; for clos'd by foes around, On all fides thick the peals of arms refound. His shield emboss'd, the ringing storm fustains, But he impervious and untouch'd remains. (Great Neptune's care preferv'd from hoftile rage This youth, the joy of Nestor's glorious age) In arms intrepid, with the first he fought, Fac'd ev'ry foe, and ev'ry danger fought; His winged lance, refiftlefs as the wind, Obeys each motion of the master's mind: Restless it slies, impatient to be free, And meditates the distant enemy. The fon of Afius, Adamas, drew near, And struck his target with the brazen spear, Fierce in his front: but Neptune wards the blow, And blunts the jav'lin of th' eluded foe.

In

In the broad buckler half the weapon stood:

Splinter'd on earth flew half the broken wood.

Disarm'd, he mingled in the Trojan crew;

But Merion's spear o'ertook him as he flew,

Deep in the belly's rim an entrance found,

Where sharp the pang, and mortal is the wound.

Bending he fell, and, doubled to the ground,

Lay panting. Thus an ox, in setters ty'd,

While death's strong pangs distend his lab'ring side,

His bulk enormous on the field displays;

His heaving heart beats thick, as ebbing life decays.

The spear, the conqu'ror from his body drew,

And death's dim shadows swam before his view.

Next brave Deipyrus in dust was laid;

King Helenus wav'd high the Thracian blade,

And

V. 720. Bending he fell, and, doubled to the ground, Lay panting.—] The original is,

The verification represents the short sudden pantings of the dying warrior, in the short sudden break at the second syllable of the second line. And this beauty is, as it happens, precisely copied in the English. It is not often that a translator can do this justice to Homer, but he must be content to imitate these graces and proprieties at more distance, by endeavouring at something parallel, tho' not the same.

V. 728. King Helenus. The appellation of King was not anciently confined to those only who bore the C 4 fovereign

And smote his temples with an arm so strong,
The helm sell off, and roll'd amid the throng: 73°
There, for some luckier Greek it rests a prize,
For dark in death the godlike owner lies!
With raging grief great Menelaus burns,
And, fraught with vengeance, to the victor turns;
That shook the pond'rous lance, in act to throw, 735
And this stood adverse with the bended bow:
Full on his breast the Trojan arrow sell,
But harmless bounded from the plated steel.
As on some ample barn's well harden'd stoor,
(The winds collected at each open door) 740
While

fovereign dignity, but applied also to others. There was in the island of Cyprus a whole order of officers called Kings, whose business it was to receive the relations of informers, concerning all that happened in the island, and to regulate affairs accordingly. Eustathius.

the are has no issued

V. 739. As on some ample barn's well-harden'd floor.] We ought not to be shocked at the frequency of these similies taken from the ideas of a tural life. In early times, before politeness had raised the esteem of arts subservient to luxury, above those necessary to the substitution of mankind; agriculture was the employment of persons of the greatest esteem and distinction: We see in sacred history Princes busy at sheep-shearing; and in the time of the Roman common-wealth, a Dictator taken from the plough. Wherefore it ought not to be wondered at, that allusions and comparisons of this kind are frequently used by ancient heroic writers, as well to raise as illustrate their descriptions. But since

While the broad fan with force is whirl'd around, Light leaps the golden grain, refulting from the ground: So from the steel that guards Atrides' heart, Repell'd to distance flies the bounding dart. Atrides, watchful of th' unwary foe, 745 Pierc'd with his lance the hand that grasp'd the bow, And nail'd it to the yew: The wounded hand Trail'd the long lance that mark'd with blood the fand; But good Agenor gently from the wound The fpear follicites, and the bandage bound; A sling's foft wool, fnatch'd from a foldier's fide. At once the tent and ligature fupply'd. is Some times a recover of bis once these arts are fallen from their ancient dignity, and become the drudgery of the lowest people, the images of them are likewise sunk into meanness, and without this confideration must appear to common readers unworthy to have place in Epic poems. It was perhaps through too much deference to fuch taftes, that Chapman omitted this simile in his translation.

2/3" Han 2 13372

V. 751. Asting's foft wool, snatch'd from a foldier's fide. At once the tent and ligature supply'd.]

The words of the original are these : 2 3 3 4 4 5 1 1 1

But for the use he has too:

Αυτήν δε ξυνέδησεν ευςρόφω οίος αώτω Σφενδόνη, η άρα οι θεράπων έχε ποιμένι λαών.

This passage, by the Commentators ancient and modern, seems rightly understood in the sense expressed in this translation: The word operation properly signifying a Sling; which (as Eustathius observes from an old Scholiaft) was ancienly made of woollen ftrings Chapman alone diffents from the common interpreta-

Behold! Pifander, urg'd by fate's decree,
Springs thro' the ranks to fall, and fall by thee,
Great Menelaus! To enhance thy fame;
High-tow'ring in the front, the warrior came.
First the sharp lance was by Atrides thrown;
The lance far distant by the winds was blown.

tion, boldly pronouncing that flings are no where mentioned in the Iliad, without giving any reason for his opinion. He therefore translates the word operdoing a Scarf, by no other authority but that he fays, it was a fitter thing to bang a wounded arm in than a sling; and very prettily wheedles his reader into this opinion by a most gallant imagination, that his fquire might carry this Scarf about him as a favour of his own or of his master's mistress. But for the use he has found for this fearf, there is not any pretence from the original; where it is only faid the wound was bound up, without any mention of hanging the arm. After all, he is hard put to it in his translation; for being resolved to have a Scarf, and obliged to mention Wool, we are left entirely at a lofs to know from whence he got the latter.

A like passage recurs near the end of this book, where the Poet says the Locrians went to war without shield or spear, only armed,

Τόξοισι καὶ ἐϋςρόφω οίὸς ἀωτω. V. 716.

Which last expression, as all the Commentators agree, fignishes a sling, the the word operation is not used. Chapman here likewise, without any colour of authority, differts from the common opinion; but very inconstant in his errors, varies his mistake, and assures us, "this expression is the true Periphrasis of a light kind of armour, call'd a fack, which all our archers used to serve in of old, and which were ever quilted with wool."

Nor pierc'd Pisander thro' Atrides shield; Pisander's spear sell shiver'd on the field. Not so discourag'd, to the future blind, Vain dreams of conquest swell his haughty mind; Dauntless he rushes where the Spartan lord Like light ning brandish'd his far-beaming fword. His left arm high oppos'd the shining shield; His right, beneath, the cover'd pole-are held; (An olive's cloudy grain the handle made, Distinct with studs; and brazen was the blade) This on the helm discharg'd a noble blow; The plume drop'd nodding to the plain below, Shorn from the creft, Atrides wav'd his steel: Deep thro' his front the weighty faulchion fell. The crashing bones before its force gave way; In dust and blood the groaning hero lay; Forc'd from their ghaftly orbs, and spouting gore, 775 The clotted eye-balls tumble on the shore. The fierce Atrides spurn'd him as he bled, Tore off his arms, and loud-exulting faid: Thus, Trojans, thus, at length be taught to fear; O race perfidious, who delight in war! 780 Already soft disease and we

V. 766. The cover'd pole-axe.] Homer never ascribes this weapon to any but the Barbarians, for the battle-axe was not used in war by the politer nations. It was the favourite weapon of the Amazons. Eustathius.

V. 779. The speech of Menelaus.] This speech of Menelaus over his dying enemy, is very different from these Already noble deeds ye have perform'd, A Princess rap'd transcends a Navy storm'd: In such bold feats your impious might approve, Without th' assistance, or the fear of Jove.

those with which Homer frequently makes his heroes infult the vanquished, and answers very well the character of this good-natured Prince. Here are no infulting taunts, no cruel farcasms, nor any sporting with the particular misfortunes of the dead: The invectives he makes are general, arifing naturally from a remembrance of his wrongs, and being almost nothing elfe but a recapitulation of them. These reproaches come most justly from this Prince, as being the only person among the Greeks who had received any personal injury from the Trojans. The Apostrophe he makes to Jupiter, wherein he complains of his protecting a wicked people, has given occasion to censure Homer as guilty of impiety, in making his heroes tax the Gods with injustice: But fince, in the former part of this speech, it is expressly said, that Jupiter will certainly punish the Trojans by the destruction of their city for violating the laws of hospitality, the latter part ought only to be confidered as a complaint to Jupiter for delaying that vengeance: This reflection being no more than what a pious fuffering mind, grieved at the flourishing condition of prosperous wickedness, might naturally fall into. Not unlike this is the complaint of the Prophet Jeremiah, ch. 12. v. 1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? Wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?

Nothing can more fully represent the cruelty and injustice of the Trojans, than the observation with which Menelaus finishes their character, by saying, that they have a more strong, constant, and insatiable appetite after bloodshed and rapine, than others have to satisfy the most agreeable pleasures and natural desires.

The

W

thi

th

or Pa

gui

faty

Con

gre

Ma

The violated rites, the ravish'd dame,
Our heroes slaughter'd, and our ships on slame:
Crimes, heap'd on crimes, shall bend your glory down,
And whelm in ruins you flagitious town.
O thou, great father, lord of earth and skies,
Above the thought of man, supremely wise!
790
If from thy hand the fates of mortals flow,
From whence this favour to an impious foe?
A godless crew, abandon'd and unjust,
Still breathing rapine, violence, and lust!
The best of things, beyond their measure, cloy:
The feast, the dance; whate'er mankind desire,
Ev'n the sweet charms of sacred numbers tire.

But

V. 795. The best of things, beyond their measure, cloy.] These words comprehend a very natural sentiment, which perfectly shews the wonderful solly of men: They are soon wearied with the most agreeable things, when they are innocent, but never with the most toil-some things in the world, when unjust and criminal.

Eustathius. Dacier.

V. 797. The dance.] In the original it is called aμύμων, the blamelefs dance; to distinguish (says Eustathius) what sort of dancing it is that Homer commends. For there were two kinds of dancing practised among the ancients, the one reputable, invented by Minerva, or by Castor and Pollux; the other dishonest, of which Pan, or Bacchus, was the author. They were distinguished by the name of the tragic, and the comic or satyric dance. But those which probably our Author commends were certain military dances used by the greatest heroes. One of this fort was known to the Macedonians and Persians, practised by Antiochus the great.

But Troy for ever reaps a dire delight
In thirst of slaughter, and in suft of fight.

This said, he seiz'd (while yet the carcass heav'd)
The bloody armour, which his train receiv'd:
Then sudden mix'd along the warring crew,
And the bold son of Pylæmenes slew.

Harpalion had thro' Asia travels'd far,
Following his martial father to the war;
Thro' filial love he lest his native shore,
Never, ah never, to behold it more!
His unsuccessful spear he chanc'd to sling
Against the target of the Spartan King;
810
Thus of his lance disarm'd, from death he sties,
And turns around his apprehensive eyes.

great, and the famous Polyperchon. There was another which was danced in compleat armour, called the Pyrrbick, from Pyrricbus the Spartan its inventor, which continued in fashion among the Lacede monians. Scaliger the father remarks, that this dance was too laborious to remain long in use even among the ancients: however it feems that labour could not discourage this bold Critick from reviving that laudable kind of dance in the presence of the Emperor Maximilian and his whole court. It is not to be doubted but the performance raised their admiration; nor much to be wondered at, if they defired to fee more than once fo extraordinary a spectacle, as we have it in his own words. Poetices, lib. 1. cap. 18. Hanc faltationem [Pyrrhicam] nos & fape, & diu, coram Divo Maximiliano, justu Bonifacii patrui, non fine stupore totius Germaniæ, representavimus.

Him,

th

pl

th

11.

4t

the

alo all Him, thro' the hip transpiercing as he fled,
The shaft of Merion mingled with the dead.
Beneath the bone the glancing point descends,
And driving down, the swelling bladder rends:
Sunk in his sad companions arms he lay,
And in short pantings sobb'd his soul away;
(Like some vile worm extended on the ground)
While life's red torrent gush'd from out the wound. 820

V. 819. Like some wile worm extended on the ground.] I cannot be of Eustathius's opinion, that this simile was designed to debase the character of Harpalion, and to represent him in a mean and disgraceful view, as one who had nothing noble in him. I rather think from the character he gives of this young man, whose piety carried him to the wars to attend his father, and from the air of this whole passage, which is tender and pathetick, that he intended this humble comparison only as a mortifying picture of human misery and mortality. As to the verses which Eustathius alledges for a proof of the cowardice of Harpalion,

"Α † δ' έταρων ἐις ἔθνος ἐχάζεῖο κῆρ ἀλεείνων Πώνδοσε παπιαίνων.

The retreat described in the first verse is common to the greatest heroes in Homer; the same words are applied to Deiphobus and Meriones in this book, and to Patroclus in the 16th, v. 817. of the Greek. The same thing in other words is said even of the great Ajax, Il. 15. v. 728. And we have Ulysses described in the 4th, v. 497. with the same circumspection and sear of the darts: tho' none of those warriors have the same reason as Harpalion for their retreat or caution, he alone being unarmed, which circumstance takes away all imputation of cowardice.

Him

: illi

Him on his car the Paphlagonian train
In flow procession bore from off the plain.
The pensive father, father now no more!
Attends the mournful pomp along the shore,
And unavailing tears profusely shed,
And unrevened, deplor'd his offspring dead.

Paris from far the moving sight beheld,
With pity soften'd, and with sury swell'd:
His honour'd host, a youth of matchless grace,
And lov'd of all the Paphlagonian race!

830
With his full strength he bent his angry bow,
And wing'd the seather'd vengeance at the soe.

V. 823. The pensive father] We have seen in the 5th Iliad the death of Pylamenes general of the Paphlagonians: How comes he then in this place to be introduced as following the funeral of his fon? Euftathius informs us of a most ridiculous solution of some Criticks, who thought it might be the ghost of this unhappy father, who not being yet interred, according to the opinion of the ancients, wandered upon the Zenodotus not satisfied with this (as indeed he had little reason to be) changed the name Pylamenes into Kylamenes. Didymus thinks there were two of the fame name; as there are in Homer two Schedius's, two Eurymedons, and three Adraftus's. And others correct the verse by adding a negative, merà d' à opi martie xis; his father did not follow his chariot with his face bath'd in tears. Which last, if not of more weight than the rest, is yet more ingenious. Eustathius. Dacier.

Nor did his valiant father (now no more)
Pursue the mournful pomp along the share,
No sire survived, to grace the untimely bien,
Or sprinkle the cold ashes with a tear.

A chief

7

to n

ch

TIV

WE

AC

of

had cut pen

hon Euc

gon

pena

this

A chief there was, the brave Euchenor nam'd, For riches much, and more for virtue, fam'd, Who held his feat in Corinth's stately town; 835 Polydus' fon, a feer of old renown. Oft had the father told his early doom, By arms abroad, or flow difease at home: He climb'd his vessel, prodigal of breath, And chose the certain, glorious, path to death. 840 Beneath his ear the pointed arrow went; The foul came issuing at the narrow vent: His limbs, unnerv'd, dropt useless on the ground, And everlasting darkness shades him round. Nor knew great Hector how his legions yield, (Wrapt in the cloud and tumult of the field)

Wide

V. 840. And chose the certain glorious path to death.] Thus we see Euchenor is like Achilles, who failed to Troy, tho' he knew he should fall before it. This might somewhat have prejudiced the character of Achilles, every branch of which ought to be fingle, and superior to all others, as he ought to be without a tival in every thing that speaks a hero: Therefore we find two effential differences between Euchenor and Achilles, which preserve the superiority of the hero of the poem. Achilles, if he had not failed to Troy, had enjoyed a long life; but Euchenor had been foon cut off by some cruel disease. Achilles being independent, and as a King, could have lived at ease at home, without being obnoxious to any disgrace; but Euchenor being but a private man, must either have gone to the war, or been exposed to an ignominious penalty. Eustathius. Dacier.

V. 845. Nor knew great Hector, &c.] Most part of this book being employed to describe the brave resist-

Wide on the left the force of Greece commands,
And conquest hovers o'er th' Achaian bands:
With such a tide superior virtue sway'd,
And * he that shakes the folid earth, gave aid. 850
But in the centre Hedor six'd remain'd,
Where sirst the gates were forc'd, and bulwarks gain'd;
There, on the margin of the hoary deep,
(Their naval station where th' Ajaces keep,
And where low walls confine the beating tides, 855
Whose humble barrier scarce the foes divides;

* Neptune.

ance the Greeks made on their left under Idomeneus and Meriones; the Poet now shifts the scene, and returns to Hellor, whom he left in the centre of the army, after he had passed the wall, endeavouring in vain to break the phalanx where Ajax commanded. And that the reader might take notice of this change of place, and earry diffinctly in his mind each scene of action, Homer is very careful in the following lines to let us know, that Hellor still continues in the place where he had first passed the wall, at that part of it which was lowest, (as appears from Sarpedon's having pulled down one of its battlements on foot, lib. 12.) and which was nearest the station where the ships of Ajax were laid, because that here was probably thought a sufficient guard for that part. As the Poet is so very exact in describing each scene as in a chart or plan, the reader ought to be careful to trace each action in it; otherwife he will fee nothing but confusion in things which are in themselves very regular and distinct. This obfervation is the more necessary, because even in this place, where the Poet intended to prevent any fuch mistake, Dacier and other interpreters have applied to the present action what is only a recapitulation of the time and place described in the former book.

Where

Where late in fight both foot and horse engag'd, And all the thunder of the battle rag'd) There join'd, the whole Bæotian strength remains, The proud lonians with their sweeping trains, Locrians and Phthians, and th' Epean force; But join'd, repel not Hector's fiery course. The flow'r of Athens, Stichius, Phidas led, Bias and great Menestheus at their head. Meges the strong th' Epeian bands controul'd, 865 And Dracius prudent, and Amphion bold; The Phthians Medon, fam'd for martial might, And brave Podarces, active in the fight. This drew from Phylachus his noble line: Iphiclus' fon: and that (Oileus) thine: (Young Ajax' brother, by a stol'n embrace: He dwelt far diftant from his native place, By his fierce stepdame from his father's reign Expell'd and exil'd, for her brother flain.) These rule the Phihians, and their arms employ, Mixt with Bastians, on the shores of Troy. Now fide by fide, with like unweary'd care,

Now fide by fide, with like unweary'd care,
Each Ajax labour'd thro' the field of war.
So when two lordly bulls, with equal toil,
Force the bright plowshare thro' the fallow foil,

880
Join'd

V. 861. Phthians.] The Phthians are not the troops of Achilles, for these were called Phthiates; but they were the troops of Protesilaus and Philodetes. Eustathius. V. 879. So when two lordly bulls, &c.] The image here

Join'd to one yoke, the stubborn earth they tear, And trace large furrows with the shining share: O'er their huge limbs the foam descends in snow, And streams of sweat down their four foreheads flow. A train of heroes follow'd thro' the field, Who bore by turns great Ajax' fevenfold shield; Whene'er he breath'd, remissive of his might, Tir'd with inceffant flaughters of the fight. His brave affociate had no following band, His troops unpractis'd in the fights of fland. 890 For not the spear the Locrian squadrons wield, Nor bear the helm, nor lift the moony shield; But skill'd from far the flying shaft to wing, Or whirl the founding pebble from the fling: Dext'rous with these they aim a certain wound, Or fell the diftant warrior to the ground. Thus in the van, the Telamonian train Throng'd in bright arms a pressing fight maintain; Far in the rear the Locrian arches lie, Thick stones and arrows intercept the sky, 900 The mingled tempest on the foes they pour; Troy's fcatt'ring orders open to the fhow'r.

here given of the Ajaces is very lively and exact; there being no circumstance of their present condition that is not to be found in the comparison, and no particular in the comparison that does not resemble the action of the heroes. Their strength and labour, their unanimity and nearness to each other, the difficulties they struggle against, and the sweat occasioned by the struggling, persectly corresponding with the simile.

Now

Now had the Greeks eternal fame acquir'd,
And the gall'd Ilions to their walls retir'd;
But fage Polydamas, discreetly brave,
Address'd great Hellor, and this counsel gave.

Tho' great in all, thou feem'st averse to lend Impartial audience to a faithful friend: To Gods and men thy matchless worth is known, And ev'ry art of glorious war thy own; But in cool thought and council to excel, How widely differs this from warring well? Content with what the bounteous Gods have giv'n, Seek not alone t' engross the gifts of heav'n. To fome the pow'rs of bloody war belong, To fome, fweet music, and the charm of fong; To few, and wond'rous few, has Jove affign'd A wife, extensive, all-consid'ring mind; Their guardians these, the nations round confess, And towns and empires for their fafety blefs. If heav'n has lodg'd this virtue in my breaft, Attend, O Hector, what I judge the best. See, as thou mov'ft, on dangers dangers spread, And war's whole fury burns around thy head : Behold, distress'd within yon' hostile wall, 925 How many Trojans yield, disperse, or fall? What troops, out-number'd, scarce the war maintain? And what brave heroes at the ships lie slain? Here cease thy fury; and the Chiefs and Kings, Convok'd to council, weigh the fum of things.

ne on torono court

Whether (the Gods succeeding our desires)

To yon' tall ships to bear the Trojan sires:
Or quit the sleet, and pass unhurt away,
Contented with the conquest of the day,
I fear, I fear, lest Greece (not yet undone)

Pay the large debt of last revolving sun.

Achilles, great Achilles, yet remains
On yonder decks, and yet o'erlooks the plains!

The counsel pleas'd; and Hestor, with a bound,
Leap'd from his chariot on the trembling ground; 940

Swift as he leap'd, his clanging arms resound.

V. 937. Achilles, great Achilles, yet remains On yonder decks, and yet o'erlooks the plains! There never was a nobler encomium than this of Achilles. It feems enough to fo wife a counsellor as Polydamas, to convince so intrepid a warrior as Hector, in how great danger the Trojans stood, to say, Achilles "Though he abstans from the fight, he still " casts his eye on the battle; it is true we are a brave " army, and yet keep our ground, but still Achilles " fees us, and we are not fafe." This reflection makes him a God, a fingle regard of whom can turn the fate of armies, and determine the deftiny of a whole people. And how nobly is this thought extended in the progress of this poem; where we shall see in the 16th book the Trojans fly at the first fight of his armour, worn by Patroclus; and in the 18th their defeat compleated by his fole appearance, unarmed on his fhip.

V. 939. Hector, with a bound, Leap'd from his chariot.] Hector having in the last book alighted, and caused the Trojans to leave their chariots behind them, when they passed the trench, and no mention of any chariot but that of Asius since occurring in the battle ;

th

Ca

N

of lie

no

the

To guard this post (he cry'd) thy art employ, And here detain the scatter'd youth of Tray; Where yonder heroes faint, I bend my way, And hasten back to end the doubtful day.

945 This

tle; we must necessarily infer, either that Homer has neglected to mention the advance of the chariots, (a circumstance which should not have been omitted) or else, that he is guilty here of a great mistake in making Hestor leap from his chariot. I think it evident, that this is really a slip of the Poet's memory: For in this very book, v. 533. (of the original) we see Polites lead off his wounded brother to the place where his chariot remained behind the army. And again in the next book, Hestor, being wounded, is carried out of the battle in his soldiers arms to the place where his horses and chariot waited at a distance from the battle.

Χεςσὶν ἀξιρανίες φὲρον ἐμ πόνες, ὄφρ ἵκεθ' ἵππες Ωκέας οὶ οἱ ὅπισθε μάχης ἀδὲ πὶολέμοιο Έςαταν — Lib. 14. v. 428.

But what puts it beyond dispute, that the chariots continued all this time in the place where they quitted them, is a passage in the beginning of the sisteenth book, where the Trojans, being overpowered by the Greeks, sly back over the wall and trench, till they came to the place where their chariots stood.

Οἱ μεν δη παρ οχεσφιν έρητύονλο μενονίες. Lib. 15. v. 3.

Neither Eustathius nor Dacier have taken any notice of this incongruity, which would tempt one to believe they were willing to overlook what they could not excuse. I must honestly own my opinion, that there are several other negligences of this kind in Ho-

This faid: the tow'ring chief prepares to go, Shakes his white plumes that to the breezes flow, And feems a moving mountain topt with fnow. Thro' all his hoft, inspiring force, he flies,

And bids anew the martial thunder rife.

As

Wh

The

here who him)

no di

Tis 1

ments

in the himfel

thro' h whom ragious

VOL

mer. I cannot think otherwise of the passage in the present book concerning Pylamenes; notwithstanding the excuses of the Commentators which are there given. The very using the same name in different places for different persons, confounds the reader in the story, and is what certainly would be better avoided: So that 'tis to no purpose to say, there might as well be two Pylæmenes's, as two Schedius's, two Eurymedons, two Ophelestes's, &c. fince it is more blameable to be negligent in many instances than in one. Virgil is not free from this, as Macrobius has observed, Sat. 1. 5. c. 15. But the above-mentioned names are proofs of that Critick's being greatly mistaken in affirming that Homer is not guilty of the same. It is one of those many errors he was led into, by his partiality to Homer above Virgil.

V. 948. And seems a moving mountain topt with snow.] This fimile is very short in the original, and requires to be opened a little to discover its full beauty. I am not of M. Dacier's opinion, that the lustre of Hector's armour was that which furnished Homer with this image; it feems rather to allude to the plume upon his helmet, in the action of shaking which this hero is so frequently painted by our Author, and from thence distinguished by the remarkable epithet xopubalodog. This is a very pleasing image, and very much what the Painters call picturesque. I fancy it gave the hint for a very fine one in Spenser, where he represents the perfon of Contemplation in the figure of an old man almost confumed with study.

His snowy locks adown his shoulders spread, As hoary frost with spangles doth attire The mossy branches of an oak half dead.

To

To Panthus' fon, at Hector's high command,
Haste the bold leaders of the Trojan band:
But round the battlements, and round the plain,
For many a chief he look'd, but look'd in vain;
Deiphobus, nor Helenus the seer,

Nor Asius' son, nor Asius' self appear.
For these were pierc'd with many a ghastly wound,
Some cold in death, some groaning on the ground;
Some low in dust (a mournful object) lay,
High on the wall some breath'd their souls away.
Far on the lest, amidst the throng he sound (Cheering the troops, and dealing deaths around)
The graceful Paris; whom with sury mov'd,
Opprobrious, thus th' impatient chief reprov'd,

Ill-fated Paris! flave to womankind,
As smooth of face as fraudulent of mind!
Where is Deiphobus, where's Assus gone?
The god-like father, and th' intrepid son?

V. 965. Ill-fated Paris-] The reproach which Hector here casts on Paris, gives us the character of this hero, who in many things resembles Achilles; being (like him) unjust, violent, and impetuous, and making no distinction between the innocent and criminal. 'Tis he who is obstinate in attacking the entrenchments, yet asks an account of those who were slain in the attack from Paris; and tho' he ought to blame himself for their deaths, yet he speaks to Paris, as if thro' his cowardice he had suffered these to be slain, whom he might have preserved if he had sought couragiously. Eustathius.

Vol. IV.

965

The force of Helenus, dispensing fate, And great Othryoneus so fear'd of late? 970 Black fate hangs o'er thee from th' avenging Gods, Imperial Troy from her foundation nods; Whelm'd in thy country's ruins shalt thou fall, And one devouring vengeance swallow all. When Paris thus: My brother and my friend, Thy warm impatience makes thy tongue offend. In other battles I deferv'd thy blame, Tho' then not deedless, nor unknown to fame: But fince yon' ramparts by thy arms lay low, 980 I scatter'd slaughter from my fatal bow. The chiefs you feek on yonder shore lie slain; Of all those heroes, two alone remain; Deiphobus, and Helenus the feer : Each now disabled by a hostile spear. Go then, fuccessful, where thy foul inspires; 985 This heart and hand shall second all thy fires: What with this arm I can, prepare to know, Till death for death be paid, and blow for blow. But 'tis not ours, with forces not our own To combat; strength is of the Gods alone. 990 These words the hero's angry mind affuage: Then fierce they mingle where the thickest rage. Around Polydamas, distain'd with blood, Cebrion, Phalces, stern Ortheus stood; Palmus, with Polypætes the divine, 995 And two bold brothers of Hippotion's line:

(Who

F

T

Fu

Li

Be

Lik

His

His

And Shot

V

to the

the co

(Who reach'd fair Ilion, from Ascania far,
The former day; the next, engag'd in war.)
As when from gloomy clouds a whirlwind springs,
That bears Sove's thunder on its dreadful wings, 1000
Wide o'er the blasted fields the tempest sweeps,
Then gather'd, settles on the hoary deeps;
Th' afflicted deeps tumultuous mix and roar;
The waves behind impel the waves before,
Wide-rolling, foaming high, and tumbling to the shore.

Thus rank on rank the chief battalions throng,
Chief urg'd on chief, and man drove man along:
Far o'er the plains in dreadful order bright,
The brazen arms reflect a beamy light.
Full in the blazing van great Hector shin'd,
Like Mars commission'd to confound mankind.
Before him slaming, his enormous shield,
Like the broad sun, illumin'd all the field:
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray;
His piercing eyes thro' all the battle stray,
And, while beneath his targe he slash'd along,
Shot terrors round, that wither'd ev'n the strong.

V. 1005. Wide-rolling, foaming high, and tumbling to the shore.] I have endeavoured in this verse to imitate the confusion, and broken sound of the original, which images the tumult and roaring of many waters.

Κύμαλα παφλάζονλα πολυφλοίσβοιο Θαλάσσης Κυρλα, φαληριόωνλα. Thus stalk'd he dreadful; death was in his look; Whole nations fear'd: but not an Argive shook.

The tow'ring Ajax, with an ample stride, 1020

Advanc'd the first, and thus the chief defy'd.

Hector! come on, thy empty threats forbear: 'Tis not thy arm, 'tis thund'ring fove we fear : The skill of war to us not idly giv'n, Lo! Greece is humbled, not by Troy, but heav'n. 1025 Vain are the hopes that haughty mind imparts, To force our fleet: The Greeks have hands and hearts. Long ere in flames our lofty navy fall, Your boafted city and your god-built wall, Shall fink beneath us, fmoaking on the ground; And spread a long, unmeasur'd ruin round. The time shall come, when chas'd along the plain, Ev'n thou shalt call on Fove, and call in vain; Ev'n thou shalt wish, to aid thy desp'rate course, The wings of falcons for thy flying horse; Shalt run, forgetful of a warrior's fame, While clouds of friendly dust conceal thy shame.

As

fe

t

b

b fc

w ne

fu

in ve

jeć

fun

wh

rall are mig

wit.

ever

to d

ch. I

Was

fall

alfo

I

V. 1037. Clouds of friendly dust.] A Critick might take occasion from hence to speak of the exact time of the year in which the actions of the Iliad are supposed to have happened. And (according to the grave manner of a learned Dissertator) begin by informing us, that he has found it must be the summer season, from the frequent mention made of clouds of dust: Tho what he discovers might be full as well inferred from common sense, the summer being the natural season for

As thus he spoke, behold, in open view, On sounding wings a dexter eagle slew, for a campaign. However he should quote all these passages at large; and adding to the article of dust as much as he can find of the faveat of the heroes, it might fill three pages very much to his own fatisfaction. It would look well to observe farther, that the fields are described flowery, Il. 2. v. 546. that the branches of a tamarisk tree are flourishing, Il. 10. v. 537. that the warriors fometimes wash themselves in the sea, 11. 10. v. 674. and sometimes refresh themselves by cool breezes from the sea, Il. 11. v. 762. that Diomed fleeps out of his tent on the ground, Il. 10. v. 170, that the flies are very bufy about the dead body of Patroclus, Il. 19. v. 30. that Apollo covers tle body of Hector with a cloud to prevent its being fcorched, 11. 23. All this would prove the very thing which was faid at first, that it was fummer. He might next proceed to enquire, what precise critical time of fummer? And here the mention of new-made honey in Il. 11. v. 771. might be of great fervice in the investigation of this important matter: He would conjecture from hence, that it must be near the end of summer, honey being seldom taken till that time; to which having added the plague which rages in book 1, and remarked, that infections of that kind generally proceed from the extremest heats, which heats are not till near the autumn; the learned enquirer might hug himself in this discovery, and conclude with triumph.

To

If any one think this too ridiculous to have been ever put in practice, he may see what Bossu has done to determine the precise season of the Aneid, lib. 3. cb. 12. The memory of that learned Critick sailed him, when he produced, as one of the proofs that it was autumn, a passage in the 6th book, where the sall of the least is only mentioned in a simile. He has also found out a beauty in Homer, which sew even of

 D_3

his

To Jove's glad omen all the Grecians rife, 1040
And hail, with shouts, his progress thro' the skies.
Far-echoing clamours bound from side to side;
They ceas'd; and thus the Chief of Troy reply'd.

From whence this menace, this infulting strain?

Enormous boaster! doom'd to vaunt in vain.

1045

So may the Gods on Hestor life bestow,
(Not that short life which mortals lead below,
But such as those of Jowe's high lineage born,
The blue-ey'd maid, or he that gilds the morn.)

As this decisive day shall end the same

1050

Of Greece, and Argos be no more a name.

And thou, imperious! if thy madness wait
The lance of Hestor, thou shalt meet thy sate:
That giant-corfe, extended on the shore,
Shall largely feast the sowls with sat and gore.

1055

He said, and like a lion stalk'd along:
With shouts incessant earth and ocean rung,

With shouts incessant earth and ocean rung,
Sent from his foll'wing host: The Grecian train:
With answering thunders fill'd the echoing plain;
A shout that tore heav'n's concave, and above
Shook the fix'd splendors of the throne of Jove.

his greatest admirers can believe he intended; which is, that to the violence and fury of the Iliad he artfully adapted the heat of summer, but to the Odyssey the cooler and maturer season of autumn, to correspond with the sedateness and prudence of Ulysses.

*欧洲美国新州*城(国)城市省及夏州和

THE

FOURTEENTH BOOK

OFTHE

ILIAD.

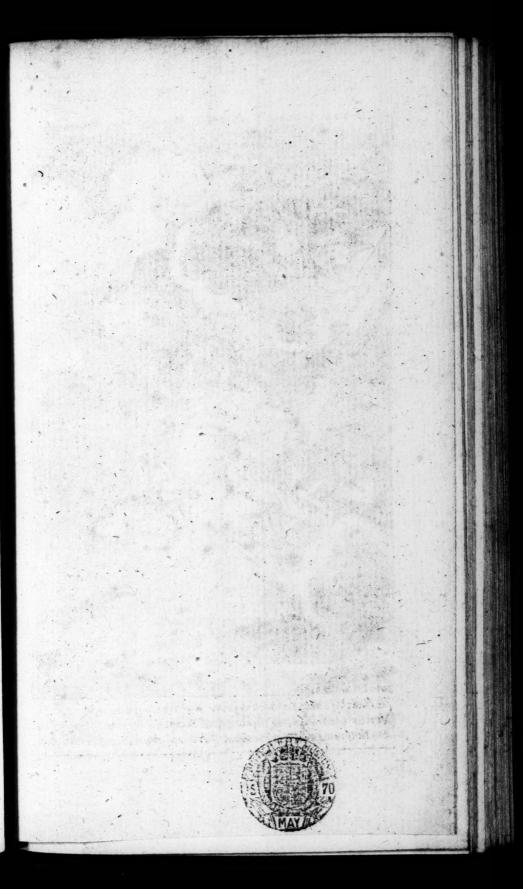

The ARGUMENT.

Juno deceives Jupiter by the Girdle of Venus.

TEstor sitting at the table with Machaon, is alarmed with the encreasing clamour of the war, and bastens to Agamemnon: On his way he meets that Prince with Diomed and Ulysses, whom he informs of the extremity of the danger. Agamemnon proposes to make their escape by night, which Ulysses withstands; to which Diomed adds his advice, that, wounded as they were, they should go forth and encourage the army with their presence; which advice is pursued. Juno feeing the partiality of Jupiter to the Trojans, forms a defign to over-reach him; she sets off her charms with the utmost care, and (the more surely to enchant him) obtains the magick girdle of Venus. She then applies herself to the God of Sleep, and with some difficulty perfundes him to feal the eyes of Jupiter; this done she goes to mount Ida, where the God, at first fight, is ravished with her beauty, finks in her embraces, and is laid afleep. Neptune takes advantage of bis flumber, and succours the Greeks: Hector is struck to the ground with a prodigious stone by Ajax, and carried off from the battle: Several actions succeed; till the Trojans, much diffressed, are obliged to give way: The lesser Ajax fignalizes bimself in a particular manner.

The Bank Still Continuing advantageous to & Trojans juno makes use of Venus Girdle to charm jupiter & of Sommus to lay him to fleep in i mean time Neptune frients up & Greeks & Trojans are Republished in their turn.

THE

*FOURTEENTH BOOK

OFTHE

I L I A D.

B UT nor the genial feast, nor flowing bowl, Could charm the cares of Nestor's watchful soul;

His startled ears th' encreasing cries attend; Then thus, impatient, to his wounded friend.

What

* The Poet, to advance the character of Neftor, and give us a due esteem for his conduct and circumspection, represents him as deeply solicitous for the common good: In the very article of mirth or relaxation from the toils of war, he is all attention to learn the sate and issue of the battle: And through his long use and skill in martial events, he judges from the nature of the uproar still encreasing, that the fortune of the D 5

5

15

What new alarm, divine Machaon, fay, What mixt events attend this mighty day? Hark ! how the shouts divide, and how they meet, And now come full, and thicken to the fleet! Here, with the cordial draught dispel thy care. Let Hecamede the strength'ning bath prepare, 10 Refresh thy wound, and cleanse the clotted gore: While I th' adventures of the day explore.

He faid; and feizing Thrafimedes' shield, (His valiant offspring) haften'd to the field; (That day, the fon his father's buckler bore) Then inatch'd a lance, and iffu'd from the door. Soon as the prospect open'd to his view, His wounded eyes the scene of sorrow knew :

day is held no longer in suspense, but inclines to one fide. Euftathius.

V. 1. But nor the genial feast.] At the end of the 11th book we left Neftor at the table with Machaon. The attack of the entrenchments, described thro' the 12th and 13th books, happened while Neftor and Machaon fate at the table; nor is there any improbability herein, fince there is nothing performed in those two books, but what might naturally happen in the space of two hours. Homer constantly follows the thread of his narration, and never fuffers his reader to forget the train of action, or the time it employs.

V. 10. Let Hecamede the bath prepare.] The cuftom of women officiating to men in the bath was usual in ancient times. Examples are frequent in the Odyssey. And it is not at all more odd, or to be fneered at, than the custom now used in France, of Valets de Chambres dreffing and undreffing the ladies.

Dire

20

Dire disarray! the tumult of the fight,
The wall in ruins, and the Greeks in flight.
As when old Ocean's filent surface sleeps,
The waves just heaving on the purple deeps;

While

V. 21. As when old Ocean's filent surface sleeps.] There are no where more finished pictures of nature. than those which Homer draws in feveral of his compa-The beauty however of some of these will be loft to many, who cannot perceive the refemblance, having never had opportunity to observe the things The life of this description will be most themselves. fensible to those who have been at sea in a calm: In this condition the water is not entirely motionless, but swells gently in smooth waves, which fluctuate backwards and forwards in a kind of balancing motion: This state continues till a rising wind gives a determination to the waves, and rolls 'em one certain way. There is scarce any thing in the whole compass of nature that can more exactly represent the state of an irresolute mind, wavering between two different designs, fometimes inclining to the one, fometimes to the other, and then moving to that point to which its resolution is at last determined. Every circumstance of this comparison is both beautiful and just; and it is the more to be admired, because it is very difficult to find sensible images proper to reprefent the motions of the mind; wherefore we but rarely meet with fuch comparisons, even in There is one of great beauty in Virgil, the best Poets. upon a subject very like this, where he compares his hero's mind, agitated with a great variety and quick fuccession of thoughts, to a dancing light reflected from a vessel of water in motion.

Cuncta videns, magno curarum fluctuat æstu, Atque animum, nunc buc, celerem, nunc dividit illuc, În partesque rapit varias, perque omnia versat. Sicut aquæ tremulum labris ubi lumen abenis Sole repercussum, aut radiantis imagine lunæ,

Omnia

While yet th' expected tempet hangs on high, Weighs down the cloud, and blackens in the sky, The mass of waters will no wind obey; 25 Tove fends one guft, and bids them roll away. While way'ring counfels thus his mind engage. Fluctuates in doubtful thought the Pylian fage; To join the hoft, or to the General hafte, Debating long, he fixes on the last: 30 Yet, as he moves, the fight his bosom warms; The field rings dreadful with the clang of arms; The gleaming faulchions flash, the jav'lins fly; Blows echo blows, and all or kill, or die. Him, in his march, the wounded Princes meet, By tardy steps ascending from the fleet. The Omnia pervolitat latè loca; jamque sub auras Erigitur, summique ferit laquearia tecti. Æn. l. 8. v. 19.

V. 30. He fixes on the last.] Nestor appears in this place a great friend to his Prince; for upon deliberating whether he should go through the body of the Grecian hoft, or else repair to Agamemnon's tent; he determines at last, and judges it the best way to go to the Now because it had been ill concerted to have made a man of his age walk a great way round about in quest of his commander, Homer has ordered it so, that he should meet Agamemnon in his way thither. And nothing could be better imagined than the reason, why the wounded Princes left their tents; they were impatient to behold the battle, anxious for its success, and defirous to inspirit the soldiers by their presence. Poet was obliged to give a reason; for in Epic Poetry, as well as in Dramatic, no person ought to be introduced without

The King of Men, Ulyffes the divine, And who to Tydeus owes his noble line. Their thips at distance from the battle stand, (In lines advanc'd along the shelving strand; without some necessity, or at least some probability,

Whofe

for his appearance. Eustathius:

V. 39. Their Ships at distance, &c.] Homer being always careful to diffinguish each scene of action, gives a very particular description of the station of the ships, shewing in what manner they lay drawn up on the land. This he had only hinted at before; but here taking occasion on the wounded heroes coming from their thips, which were at a distance from the fight (while others were engaged in the defence of those ships where the wall was broke down) he tells us, that the shore of the bay comprehended between the Rhætean and Sigman promontories was not sufficient to contain the ships in one line: which they were therefore obliged to draw up in ranks, ranged in parallel lines along the shore. How many of these lines there were, the Poet does not determine. M. Dacier, without giving any reason for her opinion, says they were but two; one advanced near the wall, the other on the verge of the sea. But it is more than probable, that there were feveral intermediate lines; fince the order in which the vessels lay is here described by a metaphor taken from the steps of a scaling ladder; which had been no way proper to give an image only of two ranks, but very fit to represent a greater tho' undetermined number. That there were more than two lines, may likewise be inferred from what we find in the beginning of the 11th book; where it is faid, that the voice of Discord, standing on the ship of Ulysses, in the middle of the fleet, was heard as far as the stations of Achilles, and Ajax, whose ships were drawn up in the two extremities: Those of Ajax were nearest the wall (as is expresly said in the 682d verse of the 13th book,

Whose bay, the fleet unable to contain At length, beside the margin of the main, Rank above rank, the crouded ships they moor; (Who landed first, lay highest on the shore.) Supported on their spears they took their way, Unsit to sight, but anxious for the day.

Nestor's approach alarm'd each Grecian breast, Whom thus the gen'ral of the host addrest.

in the orig.) and those of Achilles nearest the sea; as appears from many passages scattered thro' the Iliad.

It must be supposed, that those ships were drawn highest upon land, which first approached the shore; the first line therefore consisted of those who first disembarked, which were the ships of Ajax and Protestaus; the latter of whom seems mentioned in the verse above cited of the 13th book, only to give occasion to observe this, for he was slain as he landed first of the Greeks. And accordingly we shall see in the 15th book, it is his ship that is first attacked by the Trojans, as it lay nearest them.

We may likewise gues how it happens, that the ships of Achilles were placed nearest the sea; for in the answer of Achilles to Ulysses in the 9th book, v. 432. he mentions a naval expedition he had made while Agamemnon lay safe in the camp: So that his ships at their return did naturally lie next the sea; which without this consideration, might appear a station not fo becoming this hero's courage.

V. 47. Neftor's approach alarm'd.] That so laborious a person as Nestor has been described, so indefatigable, so little indulgent of his extreme age, and one that never receded from the battle, should approach to meet them; this it was that struck the Princes with amazement, when they saw he had left the field. Essathius.

O grace

45

O grace and glory of th' Achaian name! What drives thee, Neftor, from the field of fame? Shall then proud Hector fee his boatt fulfill'd, Our fleets in ashes, and our heroes kill'd? Such was his threat, ah! now too foon made good, On many a Grecian bosom writ in blood. Is ev'ry heart inflam'd with equal rage 55 Against your King, nor will one chief engage? And have I liv'd to fee with mournful eyes In ev'ry Greek a new Achilles rise? Gerenian Nestor then. So fate has will'd; And all-confirming time has fate fulfill'd. 60 Not he that thunders from th' aereal bow'r, Not Youe himself, upon the past has pow'r. The wall, our late inviolable bound, And best defence, lies smoaking on the ground: Ev'n to the ships their smoaking arms extend, 65 And groans of flaughter'd Greeks to heav'n ascend. On speedy measures then employ your thought: In fuch diffress if counsel profit ought; Arms cannot much: Tho' Mars our fouls incite, These gaping wounds withhold us from the fight. To him the Monarch. That our army bends, That Troy triumphant our high fleet ascends,

And that the rampart, late our furest trust, And best defence, lies smoaking in the dust: All this from Jove's afflictive hand we bear,
Who, far from Argos, wills our ruin here,
Past are the days when happier Greece was blest,
And all his favour, all his aid confest;
Now heav'n averse, our hands from battle ties,
And lists the Trojan glory to the skies.

So
Cease we at length to waste our blood in vain,
And launch what ships lie nearest to the main;

Leave

V. 81. Cease we at length, &c.] Agamemnon either does not know what course to take in this distress, or only founds the fentiments of his nobles (as he did in the fecond book of the whole army.) He delivers himself first after Nestor's speech, as it became a counfellor to do. But knowing this advice to be dishonourable, and unsuitable to the character he assumes elsewhere idpoores men rel Tenamon, &c. and considering that he should do no better than abandon his post, when before he had threatened the deferters with death; he reduces his counsel into the form of a proverb, disguising it as handsomely as he can under a sentence. It is better to shun an evil, &c. It is observable too how he has qualified the expression: He does not say, to shun the battle, for that had been unsoldierly; but he foftens the phrase, and calls it to shun evil: And this word evil he applies twice together, in advising them to leave the engagement.

It is farther remarked that this was the noblest opportunity for a General to try the temper of his officers; for he knew that in a calm of affairs, it was common with most people either out of flattery or respect to submit to their leaders: But in imminent danger, fear does not bribe them, but every one discovers his very soul, valuing all other considerations, in regard to his safety, but in the second place. He knew the men he spoke to were prudent persons, and

EOOK XIV. HOMER'S ILIAD.

85

Leave these at anchor till the coming night;
Then, if impetuous Troy forbear the fight,
Bring all to sea, and hoist each sail for slight.
Better from evils, well foreseen, to run,
Than perish in the danger we may shun.

Thus he. The fage Ulysses thus replies,
While anger flash'd from his disdainful eyes.
What shameful words (unkingly as thou art) 90
Fall from that trembling tongue, and tim'rous heart?
Oh were thy sway the curse of meaner pow'rs,
And thou the shame of any host but ours!
A host, by sove endu'd with martial might,
And taught to conquer, or to fall in fight;
Advent'rous combats and bold wars to wage,
Employ'd our youth, and yet employs our age,
And wilt thou thus desert the Trojan plain?
And have whole streams of blood been spilt in vain?

not easy to cast themselves into a precipitate flight. He might likewise have a mind to recommend himself to his army by the means of his officers; which he was not very able to do of himself, angry as they were at him, for the affront he had offered Achilles, and by consequence thinking him the Author of all their present calamities. Eustathius.

V. 92 Ob were thy sway the curse of meaner pow'rs, And thou the shame of any host but ours.

This is a noble compliment to his country and the Grecian army, to shew that it was an impossibility for them to follow even their General in any thing that was cowardly, or shameful; though the lives and safeties of them all were concerned in it.

In fuch base sentence if thou couch thy fear, Inc Speak it in whispers, left a Greek should hear. Lives there a man fo dead to fame, who dares To think fuch meannefs, or the thought declares? And comes it ev'n from him whose fov'reign sway The banded legions of all Greece obey? 105 Is this a Gen'ral's voice, that calls to flight? While war hangs doubtful, while his foldiers fight? What more could Troy? What yet their fate denies Thou giv'st the foe: all Greece becomes their prize, No more the troops, (our hoifted fails in view, Themselves abandon'd) shall the fight pursue, Thy ships first flying with despair shall see, And owe destruction to a Prince like thee.

Thy just reproofs (Atrides calm replies)
Like arrows pierce me, for thy words are wise.
Unwilling as I am to lose the host,
I force not Greece to quit this hateful coast.
Glad I submit, whoe'er, or young or old,
Ought, more conducive to our weal, unfold.

Tydides

115

V.104. And comes it ew'n from him whose sow'reign sway
The banded legions of all Greece obey?]

As who should say, that another man might indeed have uttered the same advice, but it could not be a person of prudence; or if he had prudence, he could not be a governor, but a private man; or if a governor, yet one who had not a well-disciplined and obedient army; or lastly, if he had an army so conditioned, yet it could not be so large and numerous an one as that of Agamemnon. This is a fine climax, and of wonderful strength. Eustathius.

V. 118. Whoe'er, or young, or old, &c.] This nearly refembles

Tydides cut him short and thus began:

Such counsel if ye seek, behold the man

Who boldly gives it, and what he shall say,

Young, tho' he be, disdain not to obey:

A youth, who from the mighty Tydeus springs,

May speak to Councils and assembled Kings.

Hear then in me the great Oenides' son,

Whose honour'd dust (his race of glory run)

Lies whelm'd in ruins of the Theban wall;

Brave in his life, and glorious in his fall.

refembles an ancient custom at Athens, where in times of trouble and distress, every one of what age or quality soever, was invited to give in his opinion with freedom by the publick cryer. Eustathius.

15

des

ay

ave

of

e a yet ny;

uld

ga-itul

arly bles

V. 120.] This speech of Diomed is naturally introduced, beginning with an answer, as if he had been called upon to give his advice. The counsel he propofes was that alone which could be of any real fervice in their present exigency: However, fince he ventures to advise where Ulysses is at a loss, and Nestor himself filent, he thinks it proper to apologize for this liberty by reminding them of his birth and descent, hoping thence to add to his council a weight and authority which he could not from his years and experience. cannot indeed be denied that this historical digression feems more out of feafon than any of the fame kind which we so frequently meet with in Homer, since his birth and parentage must have been sufficiently known to all at the fiege, as he here tells them. This must be owned a defect not altogether to be excused in the Poet, but which may receive some alleviation, if considered as a fault of temperament. For he had certainly a strong inclination to genealogical stories, and too frequently takes occasion to gratify this humour,

With

With three bold fons was gen'rous Protheus bleft, 130 Who Pleuron's walls and Calydon poffeft; Melas and Agrius, but (who furpast The rest in courage) Oeneus was the last: From him, my Sire. From Calydon expell'd, He pass'd to Argos, and in exile dwell'd; 135 The Monarch's daughter there (fo Youe ordain'd) He won, and flourish'd where Adrastus reign'd: There rich in fortune's gifts, his acres till'd, Beheld his vines their liquid harvest yield, And num'rous flocks that whiten'd all the field. 140 Such Tydeus was, the foremost once in fame! Nor lives in Greece a stranger to his name. Then, what for common good my thoughts inspire, Attend, and in the fon respect the fire. Tho' fore of battle, tho' with wounds opprest, Let each go forth, and animate the rest,

Advance

V. 135. He pass'd to Argos.] This is a very artful colour: He calls the flight of his father for killing one of his brothers, travelling and dwelling at Argos, without mentioning the cause and occasion of his retreat. What immediately follows (so Jove ordained) does not only contain in it a difguise of his crime, but is a just motive likewise for our compassion. Eustathius.

V. 146. Let each go forth, and animate the rest.] It is worth a remark, with what management and discretion the Poet has brought these four Kings, and no more towards the engagement, since these are sufficient alone to perform all that he requires. For Nessor proposes to them to enquire, if there be any way or means

Advance the glory which he cannot share,
Tho' not partaker, witness of the war.
But lest new wounds on wounds o'erpow'r us quite,
Beyond the missile jav'lin's sounding slight,
Safe let us stand; and from the tumult far,
Inspire the ranks, and rule the distant war.

He added not: the list'ning Kings obey,

Slow moving on; Atrides leads the way.

The God of Ocean (to inflame their rage)

Appears a Warrior furrow'd o'er with age;

Pres'd in his own, the Gen'ral's hand he took,

And thus the venerable Hero spoke.

Atrides, lo! with what disdainful eye

Achilles sees his country's forces sty:

160

Blind impious man! whose anger is his guide,

Who glories in unutterable pride,

So may he perish, so may fove disclaim

The wretch relentless, and o'erwhelm'd with shame!

But heav'n forsakes not thee: O'er yonder sands

165

Soon shalt thou view the scatter'd Trojan bands means which prudence can direct for their fecurity. Agamemnon attempts to discover that method. Ulysses resutes him, as one whose method was dishonourable, but proposes no other project. Diomed supplies that desiciency, and shews what must be done: That wounded as they are, they should go forth to the battle; for though they were not able to engage, yet their presence would re-establish their affairs by detaining in arms those who might otherwise quit the field. This counsel is embraced, and readily obeyed by the rest. Eustathius.

Fly

Fly diverse; while proud Kings, and Chiefs renown'd, Driv'n heaps on heaps, with clouds involv'd around Of rolling dust, their winged wheels employ

To hide their ignominious heads in Troy.

He spoke, then rush'd amongst the warring crew;
And sent his voice before him as he slew,
Loud, as the shout encountring armies yield,
When twice ten thousand shake the lab'ring field:
Such was the voice, and such the thund'ring sound 175
Of him, whose trident rends the solid ground.
Each Argive bosom beats to meet the fight,
And grizzly war appears a pleasing sight.

Mean time Saturnia from Olympus' brow, High-thron'd in gold, beheld the fields below;

With

So

CE

ci

'V. 179. The ftory of Jupiter and Juno.] I don't know a bolder fiction in all antiquity, than this of Jupiter's being deceived and laid afleep, or that has a greater air of impiety and absurdity. It is an observation of Mons. de St. Evremond upon the ancient poets, which every one will agree to: " That it is furprizing enough to " find them fo scrupulous to preserve probability, in " actions purely human; and fo ready to violate it " in representing the actions of the Gods. Even those " who have spoken more sagely than the rest, of their " nature, could not forbear to speak extravagantly of " their conduct. When they establish their being and " their attributes, they make them immortal, infinite, " almighty, perfectly wife, and perfectly good: But " the moment they represent them acting, there is no " weakness to which they do not make them stoop, and " no folly or wickedness they do not make them com-" mit." The fame author answers this in another place by remarking, "That truth was not the inclina-"tion of the first ages: a foolish lie or a lucky falshood

With joy the glorious conflict she survey'd, Where her great brother gave the Grecians aid. But plac'd alost, on Ida's shady height She sees her Jove, and trembles at the sight.

Fore

" gave reputation to impostors, and pleasure to the credulous. It was the whole secret of the great and

" the wife, to govern the simple and ignorant herd.

"The vulgar, who pay a profound reverence to myfterious errors, would have despised plain truth, and

" it was thought a piece of prudence to deceive them.
" All the discourses of the ancients were fitted to so " advantageous a defign. There was nothing to be feen but fictions, allegories, and fimilitudes, and

" nothing was to appear as it was in itself."

I must needs, upon the whole, as far as I can judge, give up the morality of this fable; but what colour of excuse for it Homer might have from ancient tradition, or what mystical or allegorical sense might atone for the appearing impiety, is hard to be afcertained at this distant period of time. That there had been before his age a tradition of Jupiter's being laid asleep, appears from the story of Hercules at Coos, referred to by our author, v. 285. There is also a passage in Diodorus, lib. 1. c.7. which gives some small light to this fiction. Among other reasons which that historian lays down to prove that Homer travelled into Egypt, he alledges this paffage of the interview of Jupiter and Juno, which he fays was grounded upon an Egyptian festival, whereon the nuptial ceremonies of these two deities were celebrated, at which time both their tabernacles, adorned with all forts of flowers, are carried by the priests to the top of a high mountain. Indeed as the greatest part of the ceremonies of the ancient religions confifted in some fymbolical representaions of certain actions of their Gods, or rather deified mortals, fo a great part of ancient poetry confifted in the description of the actions exhibited

Jove to deceive, what method shall she try, 185 What arts to blind his all-beholding eye! At length she trusts her pow'r; resolv'd to prove The old, yet still successful, cheat of love;

Against

exhibited in those ceremonies. The loves of Venus and Adonis are a remarkable instance of this kind, which, tho' under different names, were celebrated by annual representations, as well in Egypt as in several nations of Greece and Afia: and to the images which were carried in these festivals, several ancient poets were indebted for their most happy descriptions. If the truth of this observation of Diodorus be admitted, the present passage will appear with more dignity, being grounded on religion; and the conduct of the poet will be more justifiable, if that, which has been generally counted an incident, wanton fiction, should prove to be the reprefentation of a religious folemnity. Confidering the great ignorance we are in of many ancient ceremonies, there may be probably in Homer many incidents entirely of this nature; wherefore we ought to be referved in our censures, lest what we decry as wrong in the Poet, should prove only a fault in his religion. And indeed it would be a very unfair way to tax any people, or any age whatever, with groffness in general, purely from the gross or absurd ideas or practices that are to be found in their religions.

In the next place, if we have recourse to allegory, (which softens and reconciles every thing) it may be imagined that by the congress of Jupiter and Juno, is meant the mingling of the æther and the air (which are generally said to be signified by these two deities.) The ancients believed the æther to be igneous, and that by its kind influence upon the air, it was the cause of all vegetation: To which nothing more exactly corresponds, than the siction of the earth putting forth her flowers immediately upon this congress. Virgil has some lines in the second Georgic, that seem a persect

explanation

"

Against his wisdom to oppose her charms, And lull the Lord of Thunders in her arms.

190

Swift

explanation of the fable into this sense. In describing the spring, he hints as if something of a vivifying influence was at that time spread from the upper heavens into the air. He calls Jupiter expressly Æther, and represents him operating upon his spouse for the production of all things.

Tum pater omnipotens fæcundis imbribus æther Conjugis in gremio lætæ descendit, & omnes Magnus alit, magno commixtus corpore fætus Parturit omnis ager, &c.

But be all this as it will, it is certain, that whatever may be thought of this fable in a theological or philofophical view, it is one of the most beautiful pieces that ever was produced by Poetry. Neither does it want its moral: An ingenious modern writer (whom I am pleased to take any occasion of quoting) has given it us in these words.

"This passage of Homer may suggest abundance of "instruction to a woman who has a mind to preserve, "or recall the affection of her husband. The care of "her person and dress, with the particular blandish-"ments woven in the Ceftus, are so plainly recommend-"ed in this fable, and so indispensably necessary in e-" very female who desires to please, that they need no "farther explanation. The discretion likewise in co-" vering all matrimonial quarrels from the knowledge " of others, is taught in the pretended vifit to Tethys, " in the speech where Juno addresses herself to Venus; "as the chafte and prudent management of a wife's " charms is intimated by the same pretence for her ap-" pearing before Jupiter, and by the concealment of "the Cestus in her bosom. I shall leave this tale to the " confideration of fuch good houswives, who are ne-VOL. IV.

Swift to her bright apartment she repairs,
Sacred to dress, and beauty's pleasing cares:
With skill divine had Vulcan form'd the bow'r,
Safe from access of each intruding pow'r.
Touch'd with her secret key, the doors unfold:
195
Self-clos'd behind her shut the valves of gold.
Here first she bathes; and round her body pours
Soft oils of fragrance, and ambrosial show'rs:

The

" ver well dreffed but when they are abroad, and think it necessary to appear more agreeable to all men liv"ing than their husbands: As also to those prudent ladies, who to avoid the appearance of being over-fond,

" entertain their husbands with indifference, aversion,

"fullen filence, or exasperating language."

V. 191. Swist to ber bright apartment she repairs, &c.] This passage may be of consideration to the ladies, and, for their sakes, I take a little pains to observe upon it. Homer tells us that the very Goddesses, who are all over charms, never dress in sight of any one: The Queen of Heaven adorns herself in private, and the doors lock after her. In Homer there are no Dieux des Ruelles, no Gods are admitted to the toilette.

I am afraid there are some earthly Goddesses of less prudence, who have lost much of the adoration of mankind by the contrary practice. Lucretius (a very good judge in gallantry) prescribes, as a cure to a desperate lover, the frequent sight of his mistress undressed. Juno herself has suffer'd a little by the very Muse's peeping into her chamber, since some nice criticks are shocked in this place of Homer, to find that the Goddess washes herself, which presents some idea as if she was dirty. Those who have delicacy will profit by this remark.

V: 198. Soft oils of fragrance.] The practice of Juno in anointing her body with perfumed oils, was a remarkable part of ancient Cosmetics, tho' entirely difnifed

The winds perfum'd, the balmy gale convey,
Thro' heav'n, thro' earth, and all th' aereal way; 200
Spirit divine! whose exhalation greets
The sense of Gods with more than mortal sweets.
Thus while she breath'd of heav'n, with decent pride
Her artful hands the radiant tresses ty'd;

Part

used in the modern arts of dress. It may possibly offend the niceness of modern ladies; but such of 'em as paint, ought to confider that this practice might, without much greater difficulty, be reconciled to cleanliness. This passage is a clear instance of the antiquity of this custom, and clearly determines against Pliny, who was of opinion that it was not fo ancient as those times, where, speaking of perfumed unquents, he says, Quis primus invenerit non traditur; Iliacis temporibus non erant, lib. 13. c. 1. Besides the custom of anointing Kings among the Tews, which the Christians have borrowed, there are several allusions in the Old Testament which shew that this practice was thought ornamental among them. The Pfalmist, speaking of the gifts of God, mentions wine and oil, the former to make glad the heart of man, and the latter to give him a chearful countenance. It feems most probable that this was an eastern invention, agreeable to the luxury of the Asiaticks, among whom the most proper ingredients for these unguents were produced; from them this custom was propagated among the Romans, by whom it was effeemed a pleasure of a very refined nature. Whoever is curious to fee instances of their expence and delicacy therein, may be fatisfied in the first three chapters of the thirteenth book of Pliny's natural history.

d.

e's re

d-

he

of sa dif-

fed

V. 203 Thus while she breath'd of heav'n, &c.] We have here a compleat picture from head to foot of the dress of the Fair Sex, and of the mode between two and three thousand years ago. May I have leave to observe the great simplicity of Juno's dress, in comparison

E 2

Part on her head in shining ringlets roll'd, Part o'er her shoulders wav'd like melted gold.

Around

205

parison with the innumerable equipage of a modern toilette? The Goddess, even when she is setting herfelf out on the greatest occasion, has only her own locks to tie, a white veil to cast over them, a mantle to dress her whole body, her pendants, and her fandals. This the Poet expresly says was all her dress, [mánla nóo mov;] and one may reasonably conclude it was all that was used by the greatest Princesses and finest beauties of those times. The good Eustathius is ravished to find, that here are no wathes for the face, nor dyes for the hair, and none of those artificial embellishments fince in practice; he also rejoices not a little, that Juno has no looking-glass, tire-woman, or waiting-maid. One may preach till doomsday on this subject, but all the commentators in the world will never prevail upon a lady to stick one pin the less in her gown, except she can be convinced that the ancient drefs will better fet off her person.

Matever regarded magnificence and luxury, so we find their women far gone in the contrary extreme of dress. There is a passage in Isaiah, Ch. 3. that gives us a particular of their ornaments; and which I think appears very well in contrast to this of Homer. The bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon: The chains and the bracelets, and the musselets, the bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the headbands and the tablets, and the ear-rings, the rings and nose jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins, the glasses and the sine linen, and the boods, and the weils.

I could be glad to ask the ladies which they should like best to imitate, the Greeks or the Asiaticks? I would desire those that are handsome and well made, to consider that the dress of June (which is the same they

(PP

Around her next a heav'nly mantle flow'd,
That rich with Pallas' labour'd colours glow'd;
Large class of gold the foldings gather'd round,
A golden zone her swelling bosom bound.

210
Far-beaming pendants tremble in her ear,
Each gem illumin'd with a triple star.
Then o'er her head she cast a veil more white
Than new-fall'n snow, and dazzling as the light.
Last her fair feet celestial sandals grace.

215
Thus issuing radiant, with majestic pace,

Forth

in flatues) has manifestly the advantage of the present, in displaying whatever is beautiful: That the charms of the neck and breast are not less laid open, than by the modern stays; and that those of the leg are more gracefully discovered, than even by the hoop-petticoat: That the fine turn of the arms is better observed; and that feveral natural graces of the shape and body appear much more conspicuous. It is not to be denied but the Asiatick and our present modes were better contrived to conceal some people's defects, but I don't speak to fuch people: I speak only to ladies of that beauty, who can make any fashion prevail by their being seen in it; and who put others of their fex under a wretched necellity of being like them in their habits, or not being like them at all. As for the rest, let them follow the mode of Judæa, and be content with the name of Afaticks.

V. 216. Thus issuing radiant, &c.] Thus the Goddess comes from her apartment, against her spouse, in compleat armour. The pleasures of women mostly prevail by pure cunning, and the artful management of their persons; for there is but one way for the weak to subdue the mighty, and that is by pleasure. The Poet shews at the same time, that men of understanding are

E 3

Forth from the dome th' imperial Goddess moves, And calls the Mother of the Smiles and Loves.

How

not mastered without a great deal of artifice and address. There are but three ways whereby to overcome another, by violence, by persuasion, or by crast: Jupiter was invincible by main force; to think of perfuading was as fruitless, after he had passed his nod to Achilles; therefore Juno was obliged of necessity to turn her thoughts entirely upon craft; and by the force of pleasure it is, that she ensnares and manages the

God. Eustathius.

V. 218. And calls the mother of the Smiles and Loves.] Notwithstanding all the pains Juno has been at, to adorn herself, she is still conscious that neither the natural beauty of her person, nor the artificial one of her dress, will be fufficient to work upon a husband: she therefore has recourse to the Cestus of Venus, as a kind of lovecharm, not doubting to inflame his mind by magical enchantment; a folly which in all ages has possest her sex. To procure this, she applies to the Goddess of Love; from whom hiding her real defign under a feigned flory, (another propriety in the character of the fair) she obtains the valuable present of this wonder-working girdle. The allegory of the Cestus lies very open, though the impertinences of Eustathius on this head are unspeakable: In it are comprized the most powerful incentives to love, as well as the strongest effects of the palfion. The just admiration of this passage has been always fo great and universal, that the Cestus of Venus is. become proverbial. The beauty of the lines, which in a few words comprehend this agreeable fiction, can scarce be equalled. So beautiful an original has produced very fine imitations, wherein we may observe a few additional figures, expressing some of the improvements which the affectation, or artifice, of the fair fex, have introduced into the art of love fince Homer's days. Taffo has finely imitated this description in the magical girdle of Armida, Gierusalemme liberata, Cant. 16.

Teneri

BOOK XIV. HOMER'S ILIAD.

99

How long (to Venus thus apart she cry'd) Shall human strifes celestial strifes divide? 220 Ah yet, will Venus aid Saturnia's joy, And fet afide the cause of Greece and Troy!

Let

Teneri Sdegni, e placide e tranquille Repulse, e cari vezzi, e liete paci, Sorrifi, parrolette, e dolci fille Di pianto, e sospir tronchi, e molli baci.

Monf, de la Motte's imitation of this fiction is likewise wonderfully beautiful.

Ce tiffu, le simbole, & la cause à la fois, Du pouvoir d' l'amour, du charme de ses loix. Elle enflamme les yeux, de cet ardeur qui touche; D'un sourire enchanteur, elle anime la bouche; Passionne la voix, en adoucit les sons, Prête ces tours heureux, plus forts que les raisons; Inspire, pour toucher, ces tendres stratagêmes, Ces refus attirans, l'ecueil des sages mêmes. Et la nature enfin, y voulut renfermer, Tout ce qui persuade, & ce qui fait aimer.

En prenant ce tissu que Venus lui presente, Junon n'etoit que belle, elle devient charmante, Les graces, & les ris, les plaisirs, & les jeux, Surpris cherchent Venus, doutent qui l'est des deux. L'amour même trompe, trouve Junon plus belle; Et son arc à la main, deja vole apres elle.

Spencer, in his fourth book, Canto 5, describes a girdle of Venus of a very different nature; for as this had the power to raise up loose desires in others, that had a more wonderful faculty to suppress them in the person that wore it: But it had a most dreadful quality, to burst asunder whenever tied about any but a chaste bosom. Such a girdle, 'tis to be feared, would produce effects very different from the other: Homer's

E 4

Cestus

Let heav'n's dread Empress (Cytheraa faid) Speak her request, and deem her will obey'd. Then grant me (faid the Queen) those conqu'ring charms, That pow'r, which mortals and immortals warms, 226 That love which melts mankind in fierce defires, And burns the fons of heav'n with facred fires! For lo! I haste to those remote abodes, Where the great parents (facred fource of Gods!) 230 Ocean and Tetbys their old empire keep, On the last limits of the land and deep. In their kind arms my tender years were past; What-time old Saturn, from Olympus cast, Of upper heav'n to Jove refign'd the reign, 235 Whelm'd under the huge mass of earth and main, For strife, I hear, has made the union cease, Which held fo long that ancient pair in peace. What honour, and what love shall I obtain, If I compose those fatal feuds again? 240 Once more their minds in mutual ties engage, And what my youth has ow'd, repay their age. She faid. With awe divine the Queen of Love Obey'd the fifter and the wife of Tove: And from her fragrant breast the Zone unbrac'd, With various skill and high embroid'ry grac'd.

Cestus would be a peace-maker to reconcile man and wife; but Spencer's Cestus would probably destroy the good agreement of many a happy couple.

In this was ev'ry art, and ev'ry charm,

To win the wifest, and the coldest warm:

Fond love, the gentle vow, the gay desire,

The kind deceit, the still-reviving fire,

Persuasive speech, and more persuasive sighs,

Silence that spoke, and eloquence of eyes.

This on her hand the Cyprian Goddess lay'd;

Take this, and with it all thy wish, she said:

With smiles she took the charm; and smiling press

The pow'rful Cestus to her snowy breast.

256

Then Venus to the courts of Jove withdrew;
Whilst from Olympus pleas'd Saturnia slew.
O'er high Piëria thence her course she bore,
O'er fair Emathia's ever-pleasing-shore,
O'er Hæmus' hills with snows eternal crown'd;
Nor once her slying foot approach'd the ground.
Then taking wing from Athos' losty steep,
She speeds to Lemnos o'er the rolling deep,
And seeks the cave of Death's half-brother, Sleep.

V 255.—And prest the pow'rful Cestus to ber snowy breast.] Eustathius takes notice, that the word Cestus is not the name, but epithet only, of Venus's girdle; tho' the epithet has prevailed so far as to become the proper name in common use. This has happened to others of our Author's epithets; the word Pigmy is of the same nature. Venus wore this girdle below her neck, and in open sight, but Juno hides it in her bosom, to thew the difference of the two characters: It suits well with Venus to make a shew of whatever is engaging in her; but Juno, who is a matron of prudence and gravity, ought to be more modest.

E 5

Sweet-

Sweet-pleasing Sleep! (Saturnia thus began) 266 Who spread'st thy empire o'er each God and Man;

If

V. 264. She speeds to Lemnos o'er the rolling deep, And feeks the cave of Death's half-brother, Sleep.] In this fiction Homer introduces a new divine personage: It does not appear whether this God of Sleep was a God of Homer's creation, or whether his pretensions to divinity were of more antient date. Poet indeed speaks of him as of one formerly active in some heavenly transactions. Be this as it will, succeeding Poets have always acknowledged his title. Virgil would not let his Æneid be without a person so proper for poetical machinery; tho' he has employed him with much less art than his master; since he appears in the fifth book without provocation or commission, only to destroy the Trojan Pilot. The criticks, who cannot fee all the allegories which the commentators pretend to find in Homer's divinities, must be obliged to acknowledge the reality and propriety of this; fince every thing that is here faid of this imaginary Deity is justly applicable to Sleep. He is called the Brother of Death; faid to be protected by Night: and is employed very naturally to lull a husband to rest in the embraces of his wife; which effect of this conjugal opiate, even the modest Virgil has remarked in the persons of Vulcan and Venus, probably with an eye to this passage of Homer:

——Placidumque petivit Conjugis infusus gremio per membra soporem.

V. 264. To Lemnos.] The commentators are hard put to it, to give a reason why Juno seeks for Sleep in Lemnos. Some finding out that Lemnos anciently abounded with wine, inform us that it was a proper place of residence for him, wine being naturally a great provoker of Sleep. Others will have it, that

If e'er obsequious to to thy Juno's will, O Pow'r.of Slumbers! hear, and favour still.

Shed

this God being in love with Pasitbaë, who resided with her sister the wise of Vulcan, in Lemnos, it was very probable he might be found haunting near his mistress. Other commentators perceiving the weakness of these conjectures, will have it that Juno met Sleep here by mere accident; but this is contradictory to the whole thread of the narration. But who knows whether Homer might not design this siction as a piece of raillery upon the sluggishness of the Lemnians; tho' this character of them does not appear? A kind of satire like that of Ariosto, who makes the angel find Discord in a monastery? Or like that of Boileau in his Lutrin, where he places Mollesse in a dormitory of the Monks of St. Bernard?

V. 266. Sweet pleasing Sleep, &c.] Virgil has copied fome part of this conversation between Juno and Sleep, where he introduces the same Goddess making a request to Æolus. Scaliger, who is always eager to depreciate Homer, and zealous to praise his favourite Author, has highly cenfured this passage: But notwithstanding this critick's judgment, an impartial reader will find, I don't doubt, much more art and beauty in the original than the copy. In the former, Juno endeavours to engage Sleep in her defign by the promife of a proper and a valuable prefent; but having formerly run a great hazard in a like attempt, he is not prevailed upon. Hereupon the Goddess, knowing his passion for one of the Graces, engages to give her to his defires: This hope brings the lover to confent, but not before he obliges Juno to confirm her promise by an oath in the most solemn manner, the very words and ceremony whereof he prescribes to These are all beautiful and poetical circumstances, most whereof are untouched by Virgil, and which Scaliger therefore calls low and vulgar. He only makes

Shed thy fost dews on Jove's immortal eyes, 270
While sunk in love's entrancing joys he lies.
A splendid footstool, and a throne, that shine
With gold unsading, Somnus, shall be thine;
The work of Vulcan; to indulge thy ease,
When wine and feasts thy golden humours please. 275
Imperial Dame (the balmy pow'r replies)
Great Saturn's heir, and empress of the skies!

makes Juno demand a favour from Eolus, which he had no reason to refuse; and promise him a reward, which it does not appear he was fond of. The Latin Poet has indeed with great judgment added one circumstance concerning the promise of children,

-& pulchrâ faciat te prole parentem.

And this is very conformable to the religion of the Romans, among whom Juno was supposed to preside over human births; but it does not appear she had any fuch office in the Greek theology.

V. 272. A splendid footstool.] Notwithstanding the cavils of Scaliger, it may be allowed that an easy chair was no improper present for Sleep. As to the footstool, Madam Dacier's observation is a very just one; that besides its being a conveniency, it was a mark of honour, and was far from presenting any low or trivial idea. It is upon that account we find it so frequently mentioned in Scripture, where the earth is called the footstool of the throne of God. In Jeremiah, Judea is called (as a mark of distinction) the footstool of the feet of God. Lament. 2. v. 1. And he remembered not the footstool of his feet, in the day of his wrath. We see here the same image, founded no doubt upon the same customs. Dacier.

O'er other Gods I spread my easy chain;
The Sire of all, old Ocean, owns my reign,
And his hush'd waves lie silent on the main.
But how, unbidden, shall I dare to steep
Jowe's awful temples in the dew of sleep?
Long since too vent'rous, at thy bold command,
On those eternal lids I laid my hand;
What-time, deserting Ilion's wasted plain,
What-time, deserting son, Alcides, plow'd the main:

When

V. 279. The Sire of all, old Ocean.] "Homer (says Plutarch) calls the sea Father of All, with a view to this doctrine, that all things were generated from water. Thales the Milesian, the head of the Ionick Sect, who seems to have been the first author of Philosophy, affirmed water to be the principle from whence all things spring, and into which all things are resolved, because the prolifick seed of all animals is a mossture; all plants are nourished by moisture; the very sun and stars, which are fire, are nourished by moist vapours and exhalations; and consequently he thought the world was produced from this element." Plut. Opin. of Philos. 1.

V. 281. But how, unbidden, &c.] This particularity is worth remarking: Sleep tells Juno that he dares not approach Jupiter without his own order; whereby he seems to intimate, that a spirit of a superior kind may give itself up to a voluntary cessation of thought and action, tho it does not want this relaxation from any weakness or necessity of its pature.

V. 285 What-time, deferting Ilion's wasted plain, &c.] One may observe from hence, that to make falsity in fables useful and subservient to our designs, it is not enough to cause the story to resemble truth,

but

When lo! the deeps arise, the tempests roar,
And drive the hero to the Coan shore:
Great Jove awaking, shook the blest abodes
With rising wrath, and tumbled Gods on Gods; 290
Me chief he sought, and from the realms on high
Had hurl'd indignant to the nether sky;
But gentle Night, to whom I fled for aid,
(The friend of earth and heav'n) her wings display'd;
Impower'd the wrath of Gods and Men to tame, 295
Ev'n Jove rever'd the venerable dame.

Vain

but we are to corroborate it by parallel places; which method the Poet uses elsewhere. Thus many have attempted great difficulties, and surmounted them. So did Hercules, so did June, so did Pluto. Here therefore the Poet seigning that Sleep is going to practise insidiously upon Jove, prevents the strangeness and incredibility of the tale, by squaring it to an ancient story; which ancient story was, that Sleep had once before got the mastery of Jove in the case of Hercules.

Euftathius.

V 296. Ev'n Jove rever'd the venerable dame.] Jupiter is represented as unwilling to do any thing that might be offensive or ungrateful to Night; the Poet (says Eustathius) instructs us by this, that a wise and honest man will curb his wrath before any aweful and venerable person: Such was Night in regard of Jupiter, seigned as an ancestor, and honourable on account of her antiquity and power. For the Greek theology teaches that Night and Chaos were before all things. Wherefore it was held sacred to obey the Night in the conslicts of war, as we find by the admonitions of the heralds to Hector and Ajax in the 7th Iliad.

Milton

Vain are thy fears (the Queen of heav'n replies,
And speaking, rolls her large majestick eyes)
Think'st thou that Troy has Jove's high savour won,
Like great Alcides, his all-conqu'ring son?
Hear and obey the mistress of the skies,
Nor for the deed expect a vulgar prize;
For know, thy lov'd one shall be ever thine,
The youngest Grace, Pasithaë the divine.

Swear then (he said) by those tremendous floods 305 That roar thro' hell, and bind th' invoking Gods.

Milton has made a fine use of this ancient opinion in relation to Chaos and Night, in the latter part of his second book, where he describes the passage of Satan thro' their empire. He calls them,

'---Eldest Night,

And Chaos, ancestors of nature;---

And alludes to the same, in those noble verses,

Behold the throne

' Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread

' Wide on the wasteful deep: With him enthron'd

Sate fable vested Night, eldest of things,

'The confort of his reign .---

That fine Apostrophe of Spenser has also the same allusion, book 1.

'O thou, most ancient grandmother of all,

' More old than Jove, whom thou at first didst breed,

Or that great house of Gods coelestial;

Which was begot in Demogorgon's hall,

' And faw'ft the fecrets of the world unmade.

Let the great parent Earth one hand sustain,
And stretch the other o'er the sacred Main.
Call the black Gods that round Saturnus dwell,
To hear and witness from the depths of hell;
That she, my lov'd one, shall be ever mine,
The youngest Grace, Pasithaë the divine.

The Queen assents, and from th' infernal bow'rs
Invokes the sable sub Tartarean pow'rs,
And those who rule th' inviolable sloods,
Whom mortals name the dread Titanian Gods.

Then swift as wind, o'er Lemnos' smoaky isle,
They wing their way, and Imbrus' sea-beat soil,
Thro' air; unseen, involv'd in darkness glide,
And light on Lectos, on the point of 1 e.

(Mother of savages, whose echoing hills
Are heard resounding with a hundred rills)

V. 307. Let the great parent Earth one hand sustain, And stretch the other o'er the sacred main, &c.] There is something wonderfully solemn in this manner of swearing proposed by Sleep to Juno. How answerable is this to the dignity of the Queen of the Goddesses, where Earth, Ocean, and Hell itself, where the whole creation, all things visible and invisible, are call'd to be witnesses of the oath of the Deity?

V. 311. That she, my low'd one, &c.] Sleep is here made to repeat the words of Juno's promise, than which repetition nothing, I think, can be more beautiful or better placed. The lover, fired with these hopes, insists on the promise, dwelling with pleasure on each circumstance that relates to his fair one. The throne and footstool, it seems, are quite out his head.

Fair Ida trembles underneath the God;
Hush'd are her mountains, and her forests nod.
There on a fir, whose spiry branches rise
To join its summits to the neighb'ring skies,
Dark in embow'ring shade, conceal'd from sight,
Sate Sleep, in likeness of the bird of night,

(Chalcis

V. 323. Fair Ida trembles.] It is usually supposed at the approach or presence of any heavenly being, that upon their motion all should shake that lies beneath them. Here the Poet, giving a description of the descent of these Deities upon the ground at Lectos, says that the lostiest of the wood trembled under their seet: Which expression is to intimate the lightness and swiftness of the motions of heavenly beings; the wood does not shake under their seet from any corporeal weight, but from a certain awful dread and horror. Eustathius.

V. 328. In likeness of the bird of night.] This is a bird about the fize of a hawk, entirely black, and that is the reason why Homer describes Sleep under its form. Here (says Eustathius) Homer lets us know, as well as in many other places, that he is no stranger to the language of the Gods. Hobbes has taken very much from the dignity of this supposition, in translating the present lines in this manner.

' And there fat Sleep in likeness of a fowl,

' Which Gods do Chalcis call, and men an owl.'

We find in Plato's Cratylus a discourse of great subtilty, grounded chiefly on this observation of Homer, that the Gods and men call the same thing by different names. The Philosopher supposes that in the original language every thing was expressed by a word, whose sound was naturally apt to mark the nature of the thing signified. This great work he ascribes to

he

(Chalcis his name with those of heav'nly birth, But call'd Cymindis by the race of earth.) 330 To Ida's top successful Juno flies; Great Tove surveys her with aspiring eyes: The God, whose light'ning fets the heav'ns on fire, Thro' all his bosom feels the fierce desire : Fierce, as when first by stealth he seiz'd her charms. Mix'd with her foul, and melted in her arms. 336 Fix'd on her eyes he fed his eager look, Then press'd her hand, and then with transport spoke, Why comes my Goddess from th' æthereal sky, And not her steeds and flaming chariot nigh? 340 Then she l haste, to those remote abodes. Where the great parent of the deathless Gods, The rev'rend Ocean and grey Tethys' reign, On the last limits of the land and main. I visit these to whose indulgent cares 345 I owe the nurfing of my tender years.

the Gods, fince it required more knowledge both in the nature of founds and things, than man had attained to. This refemblance, he fays, was almost lost in modern languages by the unskilful alterations men had made, and the great licence they had taken in compounding of words. However he observes there were yet among the Greeks some remains of this original language, of which he gives a few instances, adding, that many more were to be found in some of the barbarous languages, that had deviated less from the original, which was still preserved entire among the Gods. This appears a notion so uncommon, that I could not forbear to mention it.

Not

For strife, I hear, has made that union cease, Which held so long this ancient pair in peace. The steeds prepar'd, my chariot to convey O'er earth and feas, and thro' th' aërial way, 350 Wait under Ide: Of thy superior pow'r To ask consent, I leave th' Olympian bow'r; Nor feek, unknown to thee, the facred cells Deep under seas, where hoary Ocean dwells, For that (faid Tove) suffice another day; 355 But eager love denies the least delay. Let fofter cares the present hour employ, And be these moments sacred all to joy. Ne'er did my foul so strong a passion prove, Or for an earthly, or a heav'nly love: 360

V. 345.—To whose indulgent cares I owe the nursing, &c.] The allegory of this is very obvious. Juno is constantly understood to be the air: and we are here told she was nourished by the vapours which rise from the Ocean and the Earth. For Tethys is the same with

Rhea. Euftathius.

n

10

V. 359. This courtship of Jupiter to Juno may possibly be thought pretty singular. He endeavours to prove the ardour of his passion to her, by the instances of his warmth to other women. A great many people will look upon this as no very likely method to recommend himself to Juno's savour. Yet, after all, something may be said in defence of Jupiter's way of thinking, with respect to the Ladies. Perhaps a man's love to the sex in general may be no ill recommendation of him to a particular. And to be known or thought to have been successful with a good many, is what some moderns have found no unfortunate qualification

Not when I press'd Ixion's matchless dame, Whence rose Perithous like the Gods in fame. Not when fair Danaë felt the show'r of gold Stream into life, whence Perfeus brave and bold. Not thus I burn'd for either Theban dame, 365 (Bacchus from this, from that Alcides came) Not Phanix' daughter, beautiful and young, Whence god-like Rhadamanth and Minos sprung, Not thus I burn'd for fair Latona's face, Nor comelier Ceres' more majestic grace. Not thus ev'n for thyfelf I felt defire, As now my veins receive the pleasing fire. He spoke; the Goddess with the charming eyes Glows with celeftial red, and thus replies. Is this a scene for love? On Ida's height, 375 Expos'd to mortal, and immortal fight; Our joys prophan'd by each familiar eye; The sport of heaven, and fable of the sky! How shall I e'er review the blest abodes, 380 Or mix among the fenate of the Gods? Shall I not think, that, with diforder'd charms, All heav'n beholds me recent from thy arms? With skill divine has Vulcan form'd thy bow'r, Sacred to love and to the genial hour;

lification in gaining a lady, even a most virtuous one like Juno, especially one who (like her) has had the experience of a married state.

BOOK XIV. HOMER'S ILIAD.

113

If such thy will, to that recess retire, 385
And secret there indulge thy soft defire.

She ceas'd; and smiling with superior love,
Thus answer'd mild the cloud-compelling Jove.
Not God, nor mortal shall our joys behold,
Shaded with clouds, and circumfus'd in gold,
Not ev'n the sun, who darts thro' heav'n his rays,
And whose broad eye th' extended earth surveys.

Gazing he spoke, and kindling at the view,
His eager arms around the Goddess threw.
Glad earth perceives, and from her bosom pours Unbidden herbs, and voluntary flow'rs;

Thick

V. 395. Glad earth perceives, &c.] It is an observation of Aristotle in the 25th chapter of his Poeticks, that when Homer is obliged to describe any thing of ittelf abourd or too improbable, he constantly contrives to blind and dazzle the judgment of his readers with some shining description. This passage is a remarkable instance of that artifice; for having imagined a fiction of very great absurdity, that the Supreme Being should be laid aside in a temale embrace, he immediately, as if it were to divert his reader from reflecting on his boldness, pours forth a great variety of poetical ornaments; by describing the various flowers the earth shoots up to compose their couch, the golden clouds that encompassed them, and the bright heavenly dews, that were showered round them. Eustathius observes it as an instance of Homer's modest conduct in so delicate an affair, that he has purposely adorned the bed of Jupiter with fuch a variety of beautiful flowers, that the reader's thoughts being entirely taken up with these ornaments, might have no room for loofe imaginations. In the same manner an ancient

If

Thick new-born vi'lets a foft carpet spread, And clust'ring Lotos swell the rising bed, And fudden Hyacinths the turf bestrow. And flamy Crocus made the mountain glow. There golden clouds conceal the heav'nly pair, Steep'd in foft joys, and circumfus'd with air;

Celestial

400

ancient Scholiast has observed that the golden cloud was contrived to lock up this action from any farther enquiry of the reader.

I cannot conclude the notes on the story of Jupiter and Juno, without observing with what particular care Milton has imitated the feveral beautiful parts of this episode, introducing them upon different occasions as the subjects of his poem would admit. The circumstance of Sleep's sitting in likeness of a bird on the sirtree upon mount Ida, is alluded to in his 4th book, where Satan fits in likeness of a cormorant on the tree of life. The creation is made to give the fame tokens of joy at the performance of the nuptial rites of our first parents, as she does here at the congress of Jupiter and Juno, Lib. 8.

- To the nuptial bow'r

' I led her blushing like the morn, all heav'n

And happy constellations on that hour

' Shed their selectest influence; the earth Gave fign of gratulation, and each hill;

· Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs

· Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings

' Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub. Those lines also in the 4th book are manifestly from the fame original.

- Roses and jessamine

Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and ' wrought

' Mosaic, under foot the violet,

' Crocus and hyacinth with rich inlay

' Broider'd the ground .-

Celestial dews descending o'er the ground,
Persume the mount, and breathe Ambrosia round.
At length with love and sleep's soft pow'r opprest, 405
The panting thund'rer nods, and sinks to rest.

Now to the navy borne on filent wings, To Neptune's ear foft Sleep his message brings;

Where the very turn of Homer's verses is observed, and the cadence, and almost the words, finely translated.

But it is with wonderful judgment and decency he has used that exceptionable passage of the dalliance, ardour and enjoyment: That which seems in Homer an impious siction, becomes a moral lesson in Milton; since he makes the lascivious rage of the passion the immediate effect of the sin of our first parents after the fall.

- ' For never did thy beauty fince the day
- ' I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorn'd
- ' With all perfections, so enflame my sense,
- 'With ardour to enjoy thee, fairer now
- 'Than ever; bounty of this virtuous tree!
 'So faid he, and forbore not glance or toy
- 'Of amorous intent, well understood
- ' Of Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
- ' Her hand he feiz'd, and to a shady bank
- 'Thick over-head with verdant roof embower'd,
- ' He led her, nothing loth: flow'rs were the couch,
- ' Pansies, and violets, and asphodel,
- ' And hyacinth; earth's freshest, softest lap.
- There they their fill of love and love's disport
- 'Took largely, of their mutual guilt the feal;
- ' The solace of their fin : till dewy Sleep

nd

ere

'Oppress'd them, weary of their amorous play.

Milton, 1. 9.

Beside him sudden, unperceiv'd he stood,
And thus with gentle words address'd the God. 410
Now, Neptune! now, th' important hour employ,
To check awhile the haughty hopes of Troy:
While Jove yet rests, while yet my vapours shed
The golden vision round his sacred head;
For Juno's love, and Somnus' pleasing ties,
Have clos'd those awful and eternal eyes.

Thus having said the pow'r of slumber slew,
On human lids to drop the balmy dew.

Neptune, with zeal encreas'd, renews his care,
And tow'ring in the foremost ranks of war,
Indignant thus—Oh once of martial same!
O Greeks! if yet ye can deserve the name!

V. 417. The pow'r of flumber flew.] M. Dacier in her translation of this passage has thought fit to dissent from the common interpretation, as well as obvious fense of the words. She restrains the general expresfion ἐπι κλυτὰ φῦλ' ἀνθρώπων, the famous nations of men, to fignify only the country of the Lemnians, who, she fays, were much celebrated on account of Vulcan. But this strained interpretation cannot be admitted, efpecially when the obvious meaning of the words expresses what is very proper and natural. The God of Sleep, having hastily delivered his message to Neptune, immediately leaves the hurry of the battle, (which was no proper place for him) and retires among the tribes of mankind. The word Advra, on which M. Dacier grounds her criticism, is an expletive epithet very common in Homer, and no way fit to point out one certain nation, especially in an author one of whose most distinguishing characters is particularity in description.

This half-recover'd day shall Troy obtain?
Shall Hedor thunder at your ships again?
Lo still he vaunts, and threats the fleet with fires, 425
While stern Achilles in his wrath retires.
One hero's loss too tamely you deplore,
Be still yourselves, and we shall need no more.
Oh yet, if glory any bosom warms,
Brace on your firmest helms, and stand to arms: 430
His strongest spear each valiant Grecian wield,
Each valiant Grecian seize his broadest shield;
Let, to the weak, the lighter arms belong,
The pond'rous targe be wielded by the strong.
(Thus arm'd) not Hedor shall our presence stay; 435
Myself, ye Greeks! myself will lead the way.

The troops affent; their martial arms they change,
The bufy chiefs their banded legions range.
The Kings, tho' wounded, and oppress'd with pain,
With helpful hands themselves affist the train.

440
The strong and cumb'rous arms the valiant wield,
The weaker warrior takes a lighter shield.

0

e 1.

-

f

e,

15 es

21 n-

in

[-

118

Thus

V. 442. The weaker warrior takes a lighter shield.] Plutarch seems to allude to this passage in the beginning of the life of Pelopidas. "Homer, says he, makes the bravest and stoutest of his warriors march to battle in the best arms. The Grecian legislators punished those who cast away their shields, but not those who lost their spears or swords; as an intimation that the care of preserving and defending our selves is preserable to the wounding our enemy, especially in those who are Generals of armies, or Vol. IV.

Thus sheath'd in shining brass in bright array,
The legions march, and Neptune leads the way:
His brandish'd faulchion slames before their eyes,
Like light'ning slashing thro' the frighted skies.
Clad in his might th' Earth-shaking pow'r appears;
Pale mortals tremble, and confess their fears.

Governors of states." Eustathius has observed, that the Poet here makes the best warriors take the largest spears, that they might be ready prepared, with proper arms, both offensive and defensive, for a new kind of sight, in which they are soon to be engaged when the sleet is attacked. Which indeed seems the most rational account that can be given for Neptune's advice in this exigence.

Mr. Hobbes has committed a great overlight in this place; he makes the wounded Princes (who it is plain were unfit for the battle, and not engaged in the enfuing fight) put on arms as well as the others; whereas they do no more in Homer than see their orders obeyed by the rest, as to this change of arms.

V. 444. The legions march, and Neptune leads the way.] The chief advantage the Greeks gain, by the fleep of Jupiter, feems to be this: Neptune, unwilling to offend Jupiter, has hitherto concealed himself in disguised shapes; so that it does not appear that Jupiter knew of his being among the Greeks, fince he takes no notice of it. This precaution hinders him from affifting the Greeks otherwise than by his advice. But upon the intelligence received of what Juno had done, he assumes a form that manifests his divinity, inspiring courage into the Grecian chiefs, appearing at the head of their army brandishing a sword in his hand, the fight of which struck such a terror into the Trojans, that, as Homer fays, none durst approach it. And therefore it is not to be wondered, that the Trojans, who are no longer fustained by Jupiter, immediately give way to the enemy. Troy's

Troy's great defender stands alone unaw'd,

Arms his proud host, and dares oppose a God: 450

And lo! the God, and wond'rous man appear;

The sea's stern ruler there, and Hestor here.

The roaring main, at her great master's call,

Rose in huge ranks, and form'd a wat'ry wall

Around the ships: Seas hanging o'er the shores,

Both armies join: Earth thunders, Ocean roars.

Not half so loud the bellowing deeps resound,

When stormy winds disclose the dark prosound;

Less

V. 451. And lo! the God, and wond rous man appear.] What magnificence and nobleness there is in this idea! where Homer opposes Hedor to Neptune, and equalizes him in some degree to a God. Eustathius.

V. 453. The rearing main, &c.] This swelling and inundation of the sea towards the Grecian camp, as if it had been agitated by a storm, is meant for a prodigy, intimating that the waters had the same resentments with their commander Neptune, and seconded him in his quarrel. Euftathius.

V. 457. Not balf so loud, &c.] The Poet, having ended the Episode of Jupiter and Juno, returns to the battle, where the Greeks, being animated and led on by Neptune, renew the fight with vigour. The noise and outcry of this fresh onset, he endeavours to express by these three sounding comparisons; as if he thought it necessary to awake the reader's attention, which by the preceding description might be lulled into a forgetfulness of the fight. He might likewise design to shew how soundly Jupiter slept, since he is not awaked by so terrible an uproar.

This passage cannot be thought justly liable to the objections which have been made against heaping comparisons one upon another, whereby the principal object

F 2

Less loud the winds that from th' Eolian hall Roar thro' the woods, and make whole forests fall; 460 Less loud the woods, when slames in torrents pour, Catch the dry mountain, and its shades devour. With such a rage the meeting hosts are driv'n, And such a clamour shakes the sounding heav'n. The first bold jav'lin, urg'd by Hector's force, 465 Direct at Ajax', bosom wing'd its course; object is lost amidst too great a variety of different images. In this case the principal image is more strongly impressed on the mind by a multiplication of similies, which is the natural product of an imagination labouring to express something very vast: But sinding no single idea sufficient to answer its conceptions, it endeavours by redoubling the comparisons to supply this defect: The different sounds of waters, winds, and slames, being as it were united in one. We have several instances of this sort even in so castigated and reserved a writer as Virgil, who has joined together the images of this passage in the sourch Georgic, V. 261. and applied them, beautifully softened by a kind of parody, to the buzzing of a bee-hive.

Frigidus ut quendam sylvis immurmurat Auster, Ut mare sollicitum stridet restuentibus undis, Æstuat ut clausis rapidus sornacibus ignis.

Tasso has not only imitated this particular passage of Homer, but likewise added to it. Cant. 9. St. 22.

Rapido si che torbida procella

De cavernosi monti esce piu tarda:
Fiume, ch' alberi insieme, e case svella:
Folgore, che le torri abbatta, & arda:
Terremoto che'l mondo empia d'horrore,
Son picciole sembianze al suo sorore.

But there no pass the croffing belts afford, (One brac'd his shield, and one sustain'd his sword.) Then back the disappointed Trojan drew, And curs'd the lance that unavailing flew: 470 But scap'd not Ajax; his tempestuous hand A pond'rous stone up-heaving from the fand, (Where heaps, lay'd loofe beneath the warrior's feet, Or ferv'd to ballast, or to prop the fleet) Toss'd round and round, the missive marble flings; 475 On the raz'd shield the falling ruin rings, Full on his breast and throat with force descends: Nor deaden'd there its giddy fury fpends, But whirling on, with many a fiery round, Smoaks in the dust, and ploughs into the ground. 480 As

V. 480. Smoaks in the dust, and ploughs into the ground.]

Στρόμιζον δ' ώς ἔσσευε βαλών, &c.

These words are translated by several, as if they signified that Hedor was turn'd round with the blow, like a whirlwind; which would enhance the wonderful greatness of Ajax's strength. Eustathius rather inclines to refer the words to the stone ittelf, and the violence of its motion. Chapman, I think, is in the right to prefer the latter, but he should not have taken the interpretation to himself. He says, it is above the wit of man to give a more stery illustration both of Ajax's strength and Hedor's; of Ajax, for giving such a sorce to the stone, that it could not spend itself on Hedor, but afterwards turned upon the earth with that violence; and of Hedor for standing the blow so solidly: for without that consideration, the stone could rever

As when the bolt, red-hissing from above, Darts on the confecrated plant of Jove, The mountain-oak in flaming ruin lies, Black from the blow, and fmoaks of fulphur rife; Stiff with amaze the pale beholders stand, 485 And own the terrors of th' Almighty hand! So lies great Hedor proftrate on the shore; His flacken'd hand deferts the lance it bore; His following shield the fallen chief o'erspread; Beneath his helmet drop'd his fainting head; 490 His load of armour, finking to the ground, Clanks on the field; a dead, and hollow found. Loud shouts of triumph fill the crouded plain; Greece sees, in hope, Troy's great defender flain:

never have recoiled so fiercely. This image, together with the noble simile following it, seem to have given Spencer the hint of those sublime verses.

'As when almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,

'To wreak the guilt of mortal fins is bent,

'Hurls forth his thund'ring dart, with deadly food

* Enroll'd, of flames, and smouldring dreariment:

'Thro' riven clouds, and molten firmament,

'The fierce three-forked engine making way,
'Both lofty tow'rs and highest trees doth rent,

'And all that might his dreadful passage stay,
'And shooting in the earth, casts up a mound of
'clay.

His boist'rous club so bury'd in the ground, He could not rear again, &c.

BOOK XIV. HOMER'S ILIAD.	123
All spring to seize him: storms of arrows fly;	495
And thicker jav'lins intercept the sky.
In vain an iron tempest hisses round;
He lies protected, and without a wound.
Polydamas, Agenor the divine,
The pious warrior of Anchises' line,	500
And each bold leader of the Lycian band,
With cov'ring shields (a friendly circle) stand.
His mournful followers, with affistant care,
The groaning hero to his chariot bear;
His foaming courfers, swifter than the wind,	505
Speed to the town, and leave the war behind.
When now they touch'd the mead's enamel'd fi	de,
Where gentle Xantbus rolls his easy tide,	,
With watry drops the chief they fprinkle round,
Plac'd on the margin of the flow'ry ground.	510
Rais'd on his knees, he now ejects the gore;
Now faints anew, low-finking on the shore;
By fits he breathes, half views the fleeting skies,
And feals again, by fits, his swimming eyes.
Soon as the Greeks the chief's retreat beheld,	515
With double fury each invades the field.
Oilean Ajax first his jav'lin sped,
Pierc'd by whose point, the son of Enops bled;
(Sumius the brave, whom beauteous Neis bore
Amidst her flocks on Satnio's silver shore)	520

Struck thro' the belly's rim, the warrior lies Supine, and shades eternal veil his eyes. An arduous battle rose around the dead : By turns the Greeks, by turns the Trojans, bled. Fir'd with revenge, Polydamas drew near, 525 And at Prothanor shook the trembling spear; The driving jav'lin thro' his shoulder thrust, He finks to death, and grasps the bloody dust. Lo thus (the victor cries) we rule the field. And thus their arms the race of Panthus wield: 530 From this unerring hand there flies no dart, But bathes its point within a Grecian heart, Propt on that spear to which thou ow'ft thy fall, Co, guide thy darksome steps to Pluto's dreary hall.

He faid, and forrow touch'd each Argive breast: 535
The foul of Ajax burn'd above the rest.
As by his side the groaning warrior fell,
At the sierce soe he lanc'd his piercing steel;

V. 533. Propt on that spear, &c.] The occasion of this farcasm of Polydamas, seems taken from the attitude of his falling enemy, who is transfixed with a spear thro' his right shoulder. This posture bearing some resemblance to that of a man leaning on a staff, might probably suggest the conceit.

The speech of Polydamas begins a long string of sarcastick raillery, in which Eustathius pretends to observe very different characters. This of Polydamas, he says, is pleasant; that of Ajax, beroic; that of Aca-

mas, plain; and that of Peneleus, pathetic.

The foe reclining, shunn'd the flying death;
But fate, Archelochus, demands thy breath;
Thy losty birth no succour could impart,
The wings of death o'ertook thee on the dart:
Swift to perform heav'n's fatal will it fled,
Full on the juncture of the neck and head,
And took the joint, and cut the nerves in twain:
The drooping head first tumbled to the plain.
So just the stroke, that yet the body stood
Erect, then roll'd along the sands in blood.

Here, proud Polydamas, here turn thy eyes!

(The tow'ring Ajax loud-infulting cries)

Say, is this chief, extended on the plain,

A worthy vengeance for Prothænor flain?

Mark well his port! his figure and his face,

Nor speak him vulgar, nor of vulgar race,

Some lines, methinks, may make his lineage known,

Antenor's brother, or perhaps his son.

556

He spake, and simil'd severe, for well he knew
The bleeding youth: Troy sadden'd at the view.
But surious Acamas aveng'd his cause;
As Premachus his slaughter'd brother draws,
He pierc'd his heart—Such fate attends you all,
Proud Argines! destin'd by our arms to fall.
Not Troy alone, but haughty Greece shall share
The toils, the sorrows, and the wounds of war.

F 5

Behold

Behold your Promachus depriv'd of breath,	565
A victim ow'd to my brave brother's death.	4.
Not unappeas'd he enters Pluto's gate,
Who leaves a brother to revenge his fate.
Heart-piercing anguish struck the Grecian host,
But touch'd the breast of bold Peneleus most:	570
At the proud boaster he directs his course;
The boafter flies, and shuns superior force.
But young Ilioneus receiv'd the spear;
Mioneus, his father's only care:
(Phorbas the rich, of all the Trojan train	575
Whom Hermes lov'd, and taught the arts of gain)
Full in his eye the weapon chanc'd to fall,
And from the fibres scoop'd the rooted ball,
Drove thro' the neck, and hurl'd him to the plain:
He lifts his miserable arms in vain!	580
Swift his broad faulchion fierce Peneleus spread,
And from the spouting shoulders struck his head;
To earth at once the head and helmet fly;
The lance, yet sticking thro' the bleeding eye,
The victor feiz'd; and as aloft he shook	585
The goary visage, thus infulting spoke.
Trojans! your great Ilioneus behold!
Haste, to his father let the tale be told:
Let his high roofs resound with frantic woe,
Such, as the house of Promachus must know;	590

Let doleful tidings greet his mother's ear, Such, as to Promachus' fad spouse we bear; When we victorious shall to Greece return, And the pale matron in our triumphs mourn.

Dreadful he spoke, then tos'd the head on high;
The Trojans hear, they tremble, and they sly:
Aghast they gaze around the fleet and wall,
And dread the ruin that impends on all.

Daughters of Jove! that on Olympus shine,
Ye all-beholding, all-recording nine!

O say, when Neptune made proud Ilion yield,
What chief, what hero first embru'd the field?

Of all the Grecians what immortal name,
And whose blest trophies, will ye raise to same?

Thou

V. 599. Daughters of Jove! &c.] Whenever we meet with these fresh invocations in the midst of action, the Poets would feem to give their readers to underfland, that they are come to a point where, the description being above their own strength, they have occasion for supernatural affistance; by this artifice at once exciting the reader's attention, and gracefully varying the narration. In the present case, Homer seems to triumph in the advantage the Greeks had gained by the fight of the Trojans, by invoking the Muses to snatch the brave actions of his heroes from oblivion, and fet them in the light of eternity. This power is vindicated to them by the Poets on every occasion, and it is to this talk they are so solemnly and frequently summoned by our Author. Taffo has, I think, introduced one of thefe

Thou first, great Ajax! on th' ensanguin'd plain 605 Laid Hyrtius, leader of the Myfian train. Phalces and Mermer, Neftor's fon o'erthrew, Bold Merion, Morys, and Hippotion flew. Strong Periphetes and Prothoon bled, By Tencer's arrows mingled with the dead. 610 Pierc'd in the flank by Menelaus' fteel, His people's pastor, Hyperenor fell; Eternal darkness wrapt the warrior round, And the fierce foul came rushing thro' the wound. 615 But stretch'd in heaps before Oileus' fon, Fall mighty numbers, mighty numbers run; Ajax the less, of all the Grecian race, Skill'd in pursuit, and swiften in the chace.

these invocations in a very noble and peculiar manner; where, on occasion of a battle by night, he calls upon the Night to allow him to draw forth those mighty deeds, which were performed under the concealment of the shades, and to display their glories, notwithstanding that disacvantage, to all posterity.

Notte, che nel profondo oscuro seno Chiudesti, e ne l'oblio fatto si grande; Piacciati, ch' io nel tragga, e'n bel sereno A la future età lo spieghi, e mande: Viwa la fame loro, e tra lor gloria Splenda del sosco tuo l'alta memoria.

Jupiter interfel at Juno's derit fonds Apollo torunimate Hector dung or oufly rounded leto revier & Courage of Firejans who recover all their advantages & are very near fetting & Greek hips on fier B. 15

的《《紫史》,然此多多汉,然为,以为《紫沙

THE

FIFTEENTH BOOK

OF THE

ILIAD.

西大学某些不够被各分及不多以及美国的

The ARGUMENT.

The fifth battle, at the ships; and the acts of Ajax.

UPITER, awaking, sees the Trojans repulsed from the trenches, Hector in a fwoon, and Neptune at the head of the Greeks : He is highly incensed at the artifice of Juno, who appeales him by her submissions; the is then fent to Iris and Apollo. Juno, repairing to the assembly of the Gods, attempts with extraordinary address to incense them against Jupiter; in particular the touches Mars with a violent refentment: He is ready to take arms, but is prevented by Minerva. Iris and Apollo obey the orders of Jupiter; Iris commands Neptune to leave the battle, to which, after much reluctance and passion, he consents. Apollo re inspires Hector with vigour, brings him back to the battle, marches before him with his Ægis, and turns the fortune of the fight. He breaks down great part of the Grecian wall: the Trojans rush in, and attempt to fire the first line of the fleet, but are yet repelled by the greater Ajax with a prodigious slaughter.

THE

THE

FIFTEENTH BOOK

OF THE

ILIAD.

OW in swift flight they pass the trench profound,

And many a chief lay gasping on the ground:

Then stopp'd and panted, where the chariots lie;
Fear on their cheek, and horror in their eye.
Meanwhile awaken'd from his dream of love,
On Ida's summit sat imperial Jove:
Round the wide sields he cast a careful view,
There saw the Trojans sty, the Greeks pursue;

These

These proud in arms, those scatter'd o'er the plain;
And, 'midst the war, the monarch of the main.

Not far, great Hester on the dust he spies,
(His sad affociates round with weeping eyes)
Ejecting blood, and panting yet for breath,
His senses wand'ring to the verge of death.
The God beheld him with a pitying look,
And thus, incens'd, to fraudful Juno spoke.

O thou, still adverse to th' eternal will,
For ever studious in promoting ill!
Thy arts have made the god-like Hector yield,
And driv'n his conqu'ring squadrons from the field. 20
Can'st thou, unhappy in thy wiles! withstand
Our pow'r immense, and brave th' almighty hand?
Hast thou forgot, when bound and fix'd on high,
From the vast concave of the spangled sky,

I hung

V. 17. Adam, in Paradife lost, awakes from the embrace of Eve, with much the same humour with Jupiter in this place. Their circumstance is very parallel; and each of them, as soon as his passion is over, full of that refentment natural to a Superior who is imposed upon by one of less worth and sense than himself, and imposed upon in the worst manner, by shews of tenderness and love.

V. 23. Hast thou forgot, &c.] It is in the original to this effect. Have you forgot how you swung in the air, when I hung a load of two anvils at your feet, and a chain of gold on your hand? "Tho' it is, not my de"fign, says M. Dacier, to give a reason for every story
"in the pagan theology, yet I can't prevail upon my"felf

I hung thee trembling, in a golden chain; And all the raging Gods oppos'd in vain?

25

Headlong

" felf to pass over this in silence. The physical alle-" gory feems very apparent to me : Homer mysteriously " in this place explains the nature of the Air, which is " Juno; the two anvils which she had at her feet are " the two elements, earth and water; and the chains " of gold about her hands are the æther, or fire which " fills the superior region: The two groffer elements " are called anvils, to shew us, that in those two ele-" ments only, arts are exercised. I don't know but " that a moral allegory may here be found, as well as " a physical one; the Poet by these masses tied to the " feet of Juno, and by the chain of gold with which " her hands were bound, might fignify, not only that " domestick affairs should like fetters detain the wife. " at home; but that proper and beautiful works like " chains of gold ought to employ her hands."

The physical part of this note belongs to Heraclides Ponticus, Eustathius, and the Scholiatt: M. Dacier might have been contented with the credit of the moral one, as it seems an observation no less singular in a Lady.

V. 23.] Eustathius tells us that there were in some manuscripts of Homer two verses, which are not to be found in any of the printed editions, (which Hen. Stethens places here.)

Πρὶν γ' ότε δὲ σ' ἀπέλυσα ποδῶν, μύδρυς δ' ἐνὶ Τροίη Κάββαλον όφρα πέλοιτο κὰ ἐσσομένοισι πυθέσθαι•

By these two verses Homer shews us, that what he says of the punishment of Juno was not an invention of his own, but sounded upon an ancient tradition. There had probably been some statue of Juno with anvils at her seet, and chains on her hands; and nothing but chains and anvils being left by time, superstitious peo-

Headlong I hurl'd them from th' Olympian hall,
Stunn'd in the whirl, and breathless with the fall.
For godlike Hercules these deeds were done,
Nor seem'd the vengeance worthy such a son;
When, by thy wiles induc'd, sierce Boreas tost
The ship-wreck'd hero on the Coan coast:
Him thro' a thousand forms of death I bore,
And sent to Argos, and his native shore.
Hear this, remember, and our sury dread,
Nor pull th' unwilling vengeance on thy head;
Lest arts and blandishments successes prove,
Thy soft deceits, and well-diffembled love.
The Thund'rer spoke: Imperial Juno mourn'd.

The Thund'rer spoke: Imperial Juno mourn'd, And trembling, these submissive words return'd.

By ev'ry oath that pow'rs immortal ties, The foodful earth, and all infolding skies, By thy black waves, tremendous Styx! that flow Thro' the drear realms of gliding ghosts below:

By

ple raised this story, so that Homer only followed common report. What farther confirms it, is what Eustathius adds, that there were shewn near Troy certain ruins, which were said to be the remains of these masses. Dacier.

V. 43. By thy black waves, tremendous Styx!] The Epithet Homer here gives to Styx is xalescopesor, fubter-labens, which I take to refer to its passage this the infernal regions. But there is a refinement upon it, as if it signified ex also stillans, falling drop by drop from on high. Herodotus, in his sixth book, writes thus. "The

45

By the dread honours of thy facred head, And that unbroken vow, our virgin bed! Not by my arts the ruler of the main Steeps Troy in blood, and ranges round the plain:

" The Arcadians fay, that near the city Nonacris flows " the water of Styx, and that it is a small rill, which, " diffilling from an exceeding high rock, falls into a " little cavity or bason, environed with a hedge." Pausanias, who had seen the place, gives light to this passage of Herodotus. " Going from Phereus, says he, in the country of the Arcadians, and drawing to-" wards the West, we find on the left the city of Cly-" torus, and on the right that of Nonacris, and the " fountain of Styx, which from the height of a shaggy " precipice falls drop by drop upon an exceeding " high rock, and before it has traversed this rock, " flows into the river Crathis: this water is mortal " both to man and beast, and therefore it is said to " be an infernal fountain. Homer gives it a place in " his Poems, and by the description which he delivers, " one would think he had feen it." This shews the wonderful exactness of Homer, in the description of places which he mentions. The Gods fwore by Styx, and this was the strongest oath they could take; but we likewife find that men too swore by this fatal water; for Herodotus tells us, that Cleomenes, going to Arcadia to engage the Arcadians to follow him in a war against Sparta, had a defign to affemble at the city Nonacris, and make them swear by the water of this fountain. Dacier Euftath. in Odyff.

V. 47. Not by my arts, &c.] This apology is well contrived; Juno could not fwear that she had not deceived Jupiter, for this had been entirely false, and Homer would be far from authorizing perjury by fo great an example. Juno, we see, throws part of the fault on Neptune, by shewing she had not acted in concert with him. Euftathius.

By his own ardour, his own pity sway'd

To help his Greeks; he fought, and disobey'd:

Else had thy Juno better counsel giv'n,

And taught submission to the Sire of heav'n.

Think'st thou with me? fair Empress of the skies!

(Th' immortal Father with a smile replies!) Then foon the haughty Sea-god shall obey, 55 Nor dare to act, but when we point the way. If truth inspires thy tongue, proclaim our will To yon' bright funod on th' Olympian hill; Our high decree-let various Iris know, And call the God that bears the filver bow. 60 Let her descend, and from th' embattel'd plain Command the Sea-god to his wat'ry reign: While Phabus haftes, great Hector to prepare To rife afresh, and once more wake the war: 65 His lab'ring bosom re-inspire with breath, And call his senses from the verge of death. Greece, chas'd by Troy ev'n to Achilles' fleet, Shall fall by thousands at the hero's feet.

He,

V. 67. Greece, chas'd by Troy, &c.] In this discourse of Jupiter, the Poet opens his design, by giving his readers a sketch of the principal events he is to expect. As this conduct of Homer may to many appear no way artful, since it is a principal article of the charge brought against him by some late French criticks, it will not be improper here to look a little into this dispute. The case will be best stated by translating

He, not untouch'd with pity, to the plain Shall fend Patroclus, but shall fend in vain. What youth he flaughters under Ilion's walls? Ev'n my lov'd fon, divine Sarpedon, falls!

Vanquish'd

translating the following passage from Mr. de la Motte's

Reflections sur la Critique.

"I could not forbear wishing that Homer had an " art, which he feems to have neglected, that of pre-" paring events without making them known before-" hand; fo that when they happen, one might be " furprised agreeably. I could not be quite satisfied " to hear Jupiter, in the middle of the Iliad, give an " exact abridgment of the remainder of the action. " Madam Dacier alledges an excuse, that this passed' " only between Jupiter and Juno; as if the reader " was not let into the fecret, and had not as much " fhare in the confidence.

" She adds, "that as we are capable of a great' " deal of pleasure at the representation of a tragedy" " which we have feen before, fo the furprizes which " I require are no way necessary to our entertainment. "This I think a pure piece of fophittry: One may " have two forts of pleasure at the representation of a " tragedy; in the first place, that of taking part in an " action of importance the first time it passes before " our eyes, of being agitated by fear and hope for the " persons one is most concerned about, and in fine, " of partaking their felicity and misfortune, as they " happen to succeed or be disappointed.

"This therefore is the first pleasure which the poet " should defign to give his auditors, to transport them' " by pathetic surprizes which excite terror or pity. "The second pleasure must proceed from a view of, " that art which the author has shewn in raising the " former.

Vanquish'd at last by Hector's lance he lies,
Then, not till then, shall great Achilles rise:
And lo! that instant, god-like Hector dies.
From that great hour the war's whole fortune turns,
Pallas assists, and losty Ilion burns.

Not

"Tis true, when we have feen a piece already, we have no longer that first pleasure of the surprize,

" at least, not in all its vivacity; but there still remains the second, which could never have its turn, had

"not the poet laboured fucceisfully to excite the first, it being upon that indispensible obligation that we

" judge of his art.

"The art therefore confifts in telling the hearer only what is necessary to be told him, and in telling "him only as much as is requisite to the design of pleasing him. And although we know this alrea"dy when we read it a second time, we yet taste the pleasure of that order and conduct which the art re" quired,

"From hence it follows, that every poem ought to be contrived for the first impression it is to make.

"If it be otherwise, it gives us (instead of two plea"fures which we expected) two forts of disgusts, the "one, that of being cool and untouched when we " should be moved and transported; the other, that of perceiving the defect which caused that

" disgust.

"This, in one word, is what I have found in the Iliad. I was not interested or touched by the adventures, and I saw it was this cooling preparation

" that prevented my being fo."

It appears clearly that M. Dacier's defence no way excuses the Pott's conduct; wherefore I shall add two or three considerations which may chance to set it in a better light. It must be owned that a surprize artfully managed, which arises from unexpected revolutions

As

Not till that day shall Jowe relax his rage,

Nor one of all the heav'nly host engage
In aid of Greece. The promise of a God
I gave, and seal'd it with th' almighty nod,

Achilles' glory to the stars to raise;

Such was our word, and sate the word obeys.

The trembling Queen (th' almighty order giv'n)

Swift from th' Idwan summit shot to heav'n.

85

tions of great actions, is extremely pleasing. In this consists the principal pleasure of a Romance, or well writ Tragedy. But besides this, there is in the relation of great events a different kind of pleasure, which arises from the artful unraveiling of a knot of actions, which we knew before in the grofs. This is a delight peculiar to History, and Epic Poetry, which is founded on History. In these kinds of writing, a preceding fummary knowledge of the events described does no way damp our curiofity, but rather makes it more eager for the detail. This is evident in a good history, where generally the reader is affected with a greater delight in proportion to his preceding knowledge of the tacts described: The pleasure in this case is like that of an Architect's first view of some magnificent building, who was before well acquainted with the proportions of it. In an Epic Poem the case is of a like nature; where, as if the historical fore-knowledge were not fufficient, the most judicious poets never fail to excite their reader's curiofity by some small sketches of their design; which, like the outlines of a fine picture, will necessarily raise in us a greater desire to fee it in its finished colouring.

Had our author been inclined to follow the method of managing our passions by surprizes, he could not well have succeeded by this manner in the subject he chose to write upon, which being a story of great importance,

As fome way-faring man, who wanders o'er, In thought, a length of lands he trod before, Sends forth his active mind from place to place, Joins hill to dale, and measures space with space: So swift flew June to the bleft abodes, 90

If thought of man can match the speed of Gods.

There

portance, the principal events of which were well known to the Greeks, it was not possible for him to alter the ground-work of his piece; and probably he was willing to mark fometimes by anticipation, fometimes by recapitulations, how much of his flory was founded on historical truths, and that what is superad-ded were the poetical ornaments.

There is another consideration worth remembering on this head, to justify our author's conduct. It feems to have been an opinion in those early times, deeply rooted in most countries and religions, that the actions of men were not only foreknown, but predestinated by a This fentiment is very frequent in the fuperior being. most ancient writers both facred and prophane, and feems a distinguishing character of the writings of the greatest antiquity. The word of the Lord was fulfilled, is the principal observation in the history of the Old Testament; and Dios d' ETENESSO BUNN is the declared and most obvious moral of the Iliad. If this great moral be fit to be represented in poetry, what means so proper to make it evident, as this introducing Jupiter foretelling the events which he had decreed?

V. 26. As some way-faring man, &c.] The discourse of Jupiter and Juno being ended, she ascends to heaven with wonderful celerity, which the Poet explains by this comparison. On other occasions he has illustrated the actions of the mind by fenfible images from the motion of the bodies; here he inverts the case, and shews the great velocity of Juno's flight by comparing it to the quickness of thought. No other comparison could

There fate the pow'rs in awful fynod plac'd;
They bow'd, and made obeyfance as she pass'd,
Thro' all the brazen dome: With goblets crown'd
They hail her Queen; the Nectar streams around.

Fair Themis first presents the golden bowl,
And anxious, asks what cares disturb her soul?

To whom the white arm'd Goddess thus replies: Enough thou know'st the tyrant of the skies, have equalled the speed of an heavenly being. To render this more beautiful and exact, the Poet describes a traveller who revolves in his mind the several places which he has seen, and in an instant passes in imagination from one distant part of the earth to another. Milton seems to have had it in his eye in that elevated passage:

Severely

--- The speed of Gods
Time counts not, tho with swiftest minutes wing'd.

As the fense in which we have explained this passage is exactly literal, as well as truly sublime, one cannot but wonder what should induce both Hobbes and Chapman to ramble so wide from it in their translations.

'This faid, went June to Olympus high.
'As when a man looks o'er an ample plain,

'To any distance quickly goes his eye:
'So swiftly Juno went with little pain.

Chapman is yet more foreign to the subject.

'But as the mind of fuch a man, that hath a great way gone,

'And either knowing not his way, or then would let

Vol. IV.

Severely bent his purpose to fulfil,

Unmov'd his mind, and unrestrain'd his will.

Go thou, the feasts of heav'n attend thy call;

Bid the crown'd Nectar circle round the hall;

But Jowe shall thunder thro' th' ethereal dome,

Such stern decrees, such threaten'd woes to come, 105

As soon shall freeze mankind with dire surprize,

And damp th' eternal banquets of the skies.

The Goddess said, and sullen took her place;
Black horror sadden'd each celestial sace.
To see the gath'ring grudge in ev'ry breast,
Smiles on her lips a spleenful joy exprest,
While on her wrinkled front, and eye-brow bent,
Sat stedsast care, and low'ring discontent.
Thus she proceeds ——Attend, ye pow'rs above!
But know, 'tis madness to contest with fove:

115 Supreme

'His purpos'd journey; is distract, and in his vexed

Refolves now not to go, now goes, still many ways inclin'd---

V. 102. Go thou, the feasts of heav'n attend thy call.] This is a passage worthy our observation. Homer seigns that Themis, that is justice, presides over the reasts of the Gods; to let us know, that she ought much more to preside over the feasts of men, Eustathius.

V. 114. Juno's speech to the Gods.] It was no fort of exaggeration, what the ancients have affirmed of Homer, that the examples of all kind of oratory are to be found in his works. The present speech of Juno is a masterpiece in that sort, which seems to say one thing.

and

Supreme he fits; and fees in pride of fway, Your vassal Godheads grudgingly obey; Fierce in the majesty of pow'r controuls, Shakes all the thrones of heav'n, and bends the poles. Submiss, immortals! all he wills, obey; And thou, great Mars, begin and shew the way. Behold Ascalaphus! behold him die, But dare not murmur, dare not vent a figh : Thy own lov'd boasted offspring lies o'erthrown, If that lov'd boasted offspring be thy own. 125 Stern Mars, with anguish for his slaughter'd son, Smote his rebelling breaft, and fierce begun. Thus then, Immortals! thus shall Mars obey? Forgive me, Gods, and yield my vengeance way: Descending first to yon' forbidden plain, 130 The God of battles dares avenge the flain;

and persuades another. For while she is only declaring to the Gods the orders of Jupiter, at the time that she tells them they must obey, she fills them with a reluctance to do it. By representing so strongly the superiority of his power, she makes them uneasy at it, and by particularly advising that God to submit, whose temper could least brook it, she incites him to downight rebellion. Nothing can be more sly and artfully provoking, than that stroke on the death of his darling son. Do thou, O Mars, teach obedience to us all, for it is upon thee that Jupiter has put the sewerest trial: Ascalaphus thy son lies slain by his means: Bear it with so much temper and moderation, that the world may not think he was thy son.

d

78

1.1

ns

of re

of 10-be s a

ind

Dares, tho' the thunder bursting o'er my head Should hurl me blazing on those heaps of dead.

With that, he gives command to Fear and Flight
To join his rapid coursers for the fight:

The grim in arms, with hasty vengeance slies;
Arms, that reslect a radiance thro' the skies.

And now had Jove, by bold rebellion driv'n,
Discharg'd his wrath on half the host of heav'n;
But Pallas springing thro' the bright abode,
Starts from her azure throne to calm the God.
Struck for th' immortal race with timely fear,
From frantic Mars she snatch'd the shield and spear;
Then the huge helmet listing from his head,
Thus, to th' impetuous homicide she said.

By what wild passion, surious! art thou tost?

Striv'st thou with Jove? thou art already lost.

Shall not the Thund'rer's dread command restrain,

And was imperial Juno heard in vain?

Back to the skies would'st thou with shame be driv'n,

And in thy guilt involve the host of heav'n?

V. 134. To Fear and Flight.—] Homer does not fay, that Mars commanded they should join his horses to his chariot, which horses were called Fear and Flight. Fear and Flight are not the names of the horses of Mars, but the names of two furies in the service of this God: It appears likewise by other passages, that they were his children, book 13. V. 299. This is a very ancient mistake; Eustathius mentions it as an error of Antimachus, yet Hobbes and others have fallen into it.

Ilion and Greece no more should Jove engage; The skies would yield an ampler scene of rage, Guilty and guiltless find an equal fate, And one vast ruin whelm th' Olympian state. Cease then thy offspring's death unjust to call; Heroes as great have dy'd, and yet shall fall. Why should heav'n's law with foolish man comply, Exempted from the race ordain'd to die?

This menace fix'd the warrior to his throne; Sullen he fate, and curb'd the rifing groan. Then Juno call'd (Jove's orders to obey) The winged Iris, and the God of Day. Go wait the Thund'rer's will (Saturnia cry'd) On yon' tall fummit of the fount-full Ide: 165 There

V. 164. Go wait the Thund'rer's will. It is remarkable that whereas it is familiar with the Poet, to repeat his errands and messages, here he introduces Juno with very few words, where the carries a dispatch from Fupiter to Iris and Apollo. She only fays, " Jove com-" mands you to attend him on mount Ida," and adds, nothing of what had passed between herself and her consort before. The reason of this brevity is not only that the is highly disgusted with Jupiter, and so unwilling to tell her tale from the anguish of her heart; but also because Jupiter had given her no commission to relate fully the subject of their discourse: wherefore she is cautious of declaring what possibly he would have concealed. Neither does Jupiter himself in what follows reveal his decrees: For he lets Apollo only fo far into his will, that he would have him discover and rout the Greeks: Their good fortune, and the success which was to enfue, he hides from him, as one who favoured

I

19"

There in the father's awful presence stand. Receive and execute his dread command She faid, and fat: The God that gilds the day. And various Iris wing their airy way. Swift as the wind, to Ida's hills they came. 170 (Fair nurse of fountains, and of favage game) There fat th' Eternal; he, whose nod controuls The trembling world, and shakes the steady poles. Veil'd in a mist of fragrance him they found, With clouds of gold and purple circled round. 175 Well pleas'd the Thund'rer faw their earnest care, And prompt obedience to the Queen of air; Then (while a smile serenes his awful brow) Commands the Goddess of the show'ry bow. Iris! descend, and what we here ordain 180 Report to yon' mad tyrant of the main. Bid him from fight to his own deeps repair, Or breathe from flaughter in the fields of air. If he refuse, then let him timely weigh Our elder birth-right, and superior sway. 185

How shall his rashness stand the dire alarms,
If heav'n's omnipotence descend in arms?
Strives he with me, by whom his pow'r was giv'n,
And is there equal to the Lord of Heav'n?

the cause of Troy. One may remark in this passage Homer's various conduct and discretion concerning what ought to be put in practice, or lest undone; whereby his reader may be informed how to regulate his own affairs. Eustathius.

Th' Almighty spoke; the Goddess wing'd her flight To facred Ilion from th' Idaan height. 191 Swift as the ratt'ling hail, or fleecy fnows Drives thro' the skies, when Boreas fiercely blows; So from the clouds descending Iris falls ; And to blue Neptune thus the Goddess calls. 195 Attend the mandate of the Sire above. In me behold the messenger of Fove: He bids thee from forbidden wars repair To thy own deeps, or to the fields of air. This if refus'd, he bids thee timely weigh 200 His elder birthright, and superior sway. How shall thy rashness stand the dire alarms. If heav'n's omnipotence descend in arms? Striv'st thou with him, by whom all pow'r is giv'n? And art thou equal to the Lord of Heav'n! What means the haughty Sov'reign of the skies? (The King of Ocean thus, incens'd, replies) Rule as he will his portion'd realms on high; No vassal God, nor of his train am I. Three brother Deities from Saturn came, 210

80

85 at

by vn

'h'

Affign'd

V. 210. Three brother deities from Saturn came,
And ancient Rhea, earths immortal dame:
Assign'd by lot, our triple rule we know, &c.]
Some have thought the Platonic Philosophers drew from hence the notion of their Triad (which the Christian Platonists since imagined to be an obscure hint of the G 4

And ancient Rhea, earth's immortal dame:

Affign'd by lot, our triple rule we know; Infernal Pluio sways the shades below; O'er the wide clouds, and o'er the starry plain, Ethereal Fore extends his high domain ; My court beneath the hoary waves I keep, And hush the roarings of the facred deep: Olympus, and this earth in common lie; What claim has here the tyrant of the sky? Far in the distant clouds let him controul, And awe the younger brothers of the pole; There to his children his commands be giv'n. The trembling, fervile, fecond race of heav'n. And must I then (said she) O sire of Floods! Bear this fierce answer to the King of Gods? Correct it yet, and change thy rash intent; A noble mind disdains not to repent, τὸ αὐπὸ δυ, ὁ νοῦς ὁ δημιθργὸς, ἡ τῶ νίσμε ψυχὴ. In his Gorgias he tells us, τὸν "Ομηρον (autorem sc. fuisse) τῆς τῶν δημιθρικῶν Τριαδικῆς ὑπος ασεως. See Proclus in Plat. Theol. lib. 1. c. 5. Lucian Phileptr Aristotle de cælo, l. 1. c. 1 speaking of the Ternarian number from Pythagoras has these words; τὰ τρὶα πάνθα, ἢ τὸ τρὶς πὰνθη. Καὶ πρὸς τὰς ἀρις είας τῶν θεῶν χρώμεθα τῶ ἀριθμῶτετω. Καθαπερ γὰρ φασιν ἢ οἱ Πυθαγόρειοις τὸ πᾶν ἢ τὰ πὰντα τοῖς τρισίν ὅρισται. Τελευτὴ γὰρ ἢ μέσον ἢ ἀρχὴ τὸν ἀριθμὸν ἔχει τὸν τῷ παντός ταῦτα δὲ τὸν τῆς τριάδος. From which passage Trapezuntius endeavoured very seriously to prove, that Aristotle had a perfect knowledge of the Trinity. Duport (who furnished Sacred Trinity.) The Trias of Plato is well known, me with this note, and who feems to be fensible of 215

226

To elder brothers guardian fiends are giv'n, To scourge the wretch infulting them and heav'n.

Great is the profit (thus the God rejoin'd)

When ministers are bless'd with prudent mind:

Warn'd by thy words, to pow'rful fove I yield,

And quit, tho' angry, the contended field.

the folly of Trapezuntius) nevertheless in his Gnomologia Homerica, or comparison of our author's sentences with those of the scripture, has placed opposite to this verse that of St. John: There are three who give testimony in heaven, the Father, the Son, and the Haly Ghost. I think this the strongest instance I ever met with of the manner of thinking of such men, whose too much learning has made them mad.

Lactantius, de falf. relig. lib. 1 cap. 11. takes this fable to be a remain of ancient history, importing, that the empire of the then known world was divided among the three brothers; to Jupiter the oriental part, which was called Heaven, as the region of light, or the sun: to Pluto the occidental, or darker regions: and to Neptune the fovereignty of the feas.

V. 288. To elder brothers.] Iris, that she may not feem to upbraid Neptune with weakness of judgment, out of regard to the greatness and dignity of his perfon does not say that Jupiter is stronger or braver; but attacking him from a motive not in the least invidious, superiority of age, she says sententiously, that Furies wait upon our elders. The Furies are said to wait upon men in a double sense: either for evil, as upon Orestes after he had slain his mother; or else for their good, as upon elders when they are injured, to protect them and avenge their wrongs. This is an instance that the pagans looked upon birth-right as a right divine. Eustathius.

Not but his threats with justice I disclaim,

The same our honours, and our birth the same.

If yet, forgetful of his promise giv'n

To Hermes, Pallas, and the Queen of heav'n;

To favour Ilion, that persidious place,

He breaks his faith with half th' ethereal race;

Give him to know, unless the Grecian train

Lay yon' proud structures level with the plain,

Howe'er th' offence by other Gods be past,

The wrath of Neptune shall for ever last.

Thus speaking, surious from the field he strode,
And plung'd into the bosom of the flood.

The Lord of Thunders from his losty height
Beheld, and thus bespoke the Source of light.

Behold! the God whose liquid arms are hurl'd Around the globe, whose earthquakes rock the world, Desists at length his rebel war to wage, 250 Seeks his own seas, and trembles at our rage. Else had my wrath, heav'n's thrones all shaking round, Burn'd to the bottom of his seas prosound;

And

V. 252. Else bad my wrath, &c.] This representation of terrors which must have attended the conflict of two such mighty powers as Jupiter and Neptune, whereby the elements had been mixed in confusion, and the whole frame of nature had been endangered, is imaged in these sew lines with a nobleness suitable to the occasion. Milton has a thought very like it in his fourth 15

d

And all the Gods that round old Saturn dwell, Had heard the thunder to the deeps of hell. 255 Well was the crime, and well the vengeance spar'd; Ev'n pow'r immense had found such battle hard, Go thou, my fon! the trembling Greeks alarm, Shake my broad Ægis o'er thy active arm, Be god-like Hector thy peculiar care, 260 Swell his bold heart, and urge his strength to war: Let Ilion conquer, till th' Achaian train Fly to their ships and Hellespont again: Then Greece shall breathe from toils- the Godhead faid : His will divine the fon of Fove obey'd. 265 Not half so swift the failing falcon flies, That drives a turtle thro' the liquid skies; As Phabus shooting from th' Idaan brow, Glides down the mountain to the plain below. There Hedor seated by the stream he sees, 270 His fense returning with the coming breeze; Again his pulses beat, his spirits rise; Again his lov'd companions meet his eyes;

fourth book, where he represents what must have happened if Satan and Gabriel had encountered.

--- ' Not only Paradife

' In this commotion, but the starry cope

Of heav'n, perhaps, and all the elements

· At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn

With violence of this conflict, had not foon

'Th' Almighty to prevent such horrid fray, &c.

Jove thinking of his pains, they past away.

To whom the God who gives the golden day.

275

Why sits great Hector from the field so far,

What grief, what wound, withholds him from the war?

The fainting hero, as the vision bright Stood shining o'er him, half unseal'd his fight: What bleft immortal, with commanding breath, 280 Thus wakens Hector from the fleep of death? Has fame not told, how, while my trufty fword Bath'd Greece in flaughter, and her battle gor'd, The mighty Ajax with a deadly blow Had almost sunk me to the shades below? 285 Ev'n yet, methinks, the gliding ghosts I spy, And hell's black horrors fwim before my eye. . To him Apollo. Be no more difmay'd; See, and be ftrong! the Thund'rer fends thee aid; Behold! thy Phabus shall his arms employ, Phæbus, propitious still to thee and Troy. Inspire thy warriors then with manly force,

V. 274. Jove thinking of his pains, they past away.] Enstathius observes that this is a very sublime representation of the power of Jupiter, to make Hedor's pains cease from the moment wherein Jupiter first turned his thoughts towards him. Apollo finds him so far recover'd, as to be able to sit up, and know his friends. Thus much was the work of Jupiter; the God of health persects the cure.

And to the ships impel thy rapid horse:

Ev'n

Ev'n I will make thy fiery coursers way,

And drive the Grecians headlong to the sea. 2

295

Thus to bold Hector spoke the son of Jove,
And breath'd immortal ardour from above.
As when the pamper'd steed, with reins unbound,
Breaks from his stall, and pours along the ground;
With ample strokes he rushes to the flood,
To bathe his sides and cool his siery blood:

V. 298. As when the pamper'd steed.] This comparison is repeated from the fixth book, and we are told that the ancient criticks retained no more than the two first verses and the four last in this place, and that they gave the verses two marks, by the one (which was the asterism) they intimated, that the four lines were very beautiful; but by the other (which was the obelus) that they were ill placed. I believe an impartial reader who considers the two places will be of the same opinion.

Tasso has improved the justness of this simile in his fixteenth book, where Rinaldo returning from the arms of Armida to battle, is compared to the steed that is taken from his passures and mares to the service of the war: The reverse of the circumstance better agreeing with the occasion.

Qual force destrier, ch'al faticoso
Honor de l'arme vincitor sia tolto,
E lascivo marito in vil riposo
Fra gli armevti, ne paschi erri disciolto;
Se'l desta o suon di tromha, o luminoso
Acciar, cola tosto annitendo è volto;
Già già brama l'arringo, è l'huom sùl dorso
Portando, urtato riurtar nel corso.

His head now freed, he toffes to the skies: His mane dishevel'd o'er his shoulders flies He fnuffs the females in the well-known plain, And springs, exulting, to his fields again: 305 Urg'd by the voice divine, thus Hector flew, Full of the God; and all his hofts purfue. As when the force of men and dogs combin'd Invade the mountain goat, and branching hind: Far from the hunter's rage secure they lie 310 Close in the rock, (not fated yet to die) When lo! a lion shoots across the way! They fly: at once the chafers and the prey: So Greece, that late in conqu'ring troops pursu'd, And mark'd their progress thro' the ranks in blood, 315 Soon as they see the furious chief appear, Forget to vanquish, and consent to fear.

V. 311. Not fated yet to die.] Dacier has a pretty remark on this passage, that Homer extended destiny (that is the care of providence) even to the beafts of the field; an opinion that agrees perfectly with true In the book of Jonas, the regard of the theology. creator extending to the meanest rank of his creatures, is strongly expressed in those words of the Almighty, where he makes his compassion to the brute beasts one of the reasons against destroying Nineweb. Shall ! not spare the great city, in which there are more than fixscore thousand persons, and also much cattle? And what is still more parallel to this passage, in St. Matth. ch. 10. Are not two sparrows fold for a farthing? And yet not one of them shall not fall to the ground, without your father.

Thoas with grief observ'd his dreadful course, Thoas, the bravest of th' Atolian force: Skill'd to direct the jav'lin's distant flight, 320 And bold to combat in the ftanding fight; Nor more in councils fam'd for folid fense, Than winning words and heav'nly eloquence. Gods! what portent (he cry'd) these eyes invades? Lo Hedor rifes from the Stygian shades! 325 We faw him, late, by thund'ring Ajax kill'd; What God restores him to the frighted field; And not content that half of Greece lie flain. Pours new destruction on her sons again? He comes not, Fove! without thy pow'rful will, Lo! still he lives, pursues, and conquers still! Yet hear my counsel, and his worst withstand; The Greek's main body to the fleet command: But let the few whom brifker spirits warm, Stand the first onset, and provoke the storm: 335 Thus point your arms; and when such foes appear, Fierce as he is, let Hector learn to fear.

The warrior spoke, the list'ning Greeks obey,
Thick'ning their ranks, and form a deep array.
Each Ajax, Teucer, Merion, gave command,
The valiant leader of the Cretan band,
And Mars-like Meges: These the chiefs excite,
Approach the soe, and meet the coming fight:

345
350
355
360

Deep

A

T A P

by fa

CO

ar

T

W

V.362. But when aloft he shakes.] Apollo in this passage, by the mere shaking his Ægis, without acting offensively, annoys and puts the Greeks into disorder. Eustathius thus thinks that such a motion might possibly create the same consusion, as hath been reported by historians to proceed from panic fears: or that it might intimate some dreadful consusion in the air, and a noise issuing from BOOK XV. HOMER'S ILIAD. 157 Deep horror feizes ev'ry Grecian breaft, Their force is humbled, and their fear confest. 365 So flies a herd of oxen, fcatter'd wide, No fwain to guard 'em, and no day to guide, When two fell lions from the mountain come, And spread the carnage thro' the shady gloom. Impending Phabus pours around 'em fear, 370 And Troy and Hector thunder in the rear. Heaps fall on heaps: the slaughter Hector leads; First great Arcefilas, then Stichius bleeds; One to the bold Baotians ever dear, And one Menestheus' friend, and fam'd compeer. 375 Medon and Isaus, Eneas sped; This sprung from Phelus, and th' Athenians led; But haples Medon from Oileus came ; Him Ajax honour'd with a brother's name, Tho' born of lawless love: From home expell'd, 380 A banish'd man, in Phylace he dwell'd, Press'd by the vengeance of an angry wife, Troy ends, at last, his labours and his life.

from thence; a notion which feems to be warranted by Apollo's out-cry, which presently follows in the same verse. But perhaps we need not go so far to account for this siction of Homer: The sight of a hero's armour often has the like effect in an Epic Poem: The shield of Prince Arthur in Spenser works the same wonders with this Ægis of Apollo.

Mecystes next, Polydamas o'erthrew; And thee, brave Clonius! great Agenor flew. 385 By Paris, Deiochus inglorious dies, Pierc'd thro' the shoulder as he basely flies. Polites' arm laid Echius on the plain; Stretch'd on one heap, the victors spoil the slain. The Greeks dismay'd, confus'd, disperse or fall, 390 Some feek the trench, fome skulk behind the wall, While these fly trembling, others pant for breath, And o'er the flaughter stalks gigantic death. On rush'd bold Hettor, gloomy as the night, Forbids to plunder, animates the fight. 395 Points to the fleet: For by the Gods, who flies, Who dares but linger, by this hand he dies;

No

V. 386. By Paris, Deiochus inglorious dies,

Pierc'd thro' the shoulder as he basely sties.]

Here is one that falls under the spear of Paris, simitten in the extremity of his shoulder as he was slying. This gives occasion to a pretty observation in Eustathius, that this is the only Greek who falls by a wound in the back, so careful is Homer of the honour of his countrymen. And this remark will appear not ill-grounded, if we except the death of Eioneus in the beginning of lib. 6.

V. 396. For by the Gods, who flies, &c.] It fometimes happens (fays Longinus) that a writer in speaking of some person, all on a sudden puts himself in that other's place, and acts his part; a figure which marks the impetuosity and hurry of passion. It is this which Homer practises in these verses; the Poet stops

his

No weeping sister his cold eye shall close,
No friendly hand his fun'ral pyre compose.
Who stops to plunder in this signal hour,
The birds shall tear him, and the dogs devour.

Furious he said; the smarting scourge resounds;
The coursers sty; the smoaking chariot bounds:
The hosts rush on; loud clamours shake the shore;
The hostes thunder, Earth and Ocean roar!

Apollo, planted at the trench's bound,
Push'd at the bank: down sunk th' enormous mound:
Roll'd in the ditch the heapy ruin lay;
A sudden road! a long and ample way.
O'er the dread sosse (a late-impervious space)
Now steeds, and men, and cars, tumultuous pass.

his narration, forgets his own person, and instantly, without any notice, puts this precipitate menace into the mouth of his furious and transported hero. How must his discourse have languished, had he stayed to tell us, Hector then said these, or the like words. Instead of which, by this unexpected transition he prevents the reader, and the transition is made before the Poet himself seems sensible he had made it. The true and proper place for this figure is when the time presses, and when the occasion will not allow of any delay. It is elegant then to pass from one person to another, as in that of Hecataus. The herald, extremely discontented at the orders he had received, gave command to the Heraclida to withdraw. - It is no way in my power to help you; if therefore you would not perish entirely, and if you would not involve me too in your ruin, depart, and seek a retreat among some other people. Longinus, chap. 23.

The wond'ring crouds the downward level trod;
Before them flam'd the shield, and march'd the God.
Then with his hand he shook the mighty wall;
And lo! the turrets nod, the bulwarks fall.

Easy, as when ashore an infant stands,
And draws imagin'd houses in the sands;
The sportive wanton, pleas'd with some new play,
Sweeps the slight works and fashion'd domes away.
Thus vanish'd, at thy touch, the tow'rs and walls; 420
The toil of thousands in a moment falls.

The Grecians gaze around with wild despair,
Confus'd, and weary all the pow'rs with pray'r;
Exhort their men, with praises, threats, commands;
And urge the Gods, with voices, eyes, and hands. 425
Experienc'd Nestor chief obtests the skies,
And weeps his country with a father's eyes.

O Jove! if ever on his native shore,
One Greek enrich'd thy shrine with offer'd gore;

If

V. 416. As when ashore an infant stands.] This simile of the sand is inimitable; it is not easy to imagine any thing more exact and emphatical to describe the tumbling and consused heap of a wall, in a moment. Moreover the comparison here taken from sand is the juster, as it rises from the very place and scene before us. For the wall here demolished, as it was sounded on the coast, must needs border on the sand; wherefore the similitude is borrowed immediately from the subject of the matter under view.

V. 428. O Jove! if ever, &c.] The form of Neftor's prayer

If e'er, in hope our country to behold,

We paid the fattest firstlings of the fold;

If e'er thou sign'st our wishes with thy nod;

Perform the promise of a gracious God!

This day preserve our navies from the flame,

And save the reliques of the Grecian name.

435

Thus pray'd the fage: Th' Eternal gave consent,
And peals of thunder shook the sirmament.
Presumptuous Troy mistook th' accepting sign,
And catch'd new sury at the voice divine.

As,

prayer in this place resembles that of Chryses in the first book. And it is worth remarking, that the Poet well knew what shame and confusion the reminding one of past benefits is apt to produce. From the same topick Achilles talks with his mother, and Thetis herself acosts Jove; and likewise Phænix, where he holds a parley with Achilles. This righteous prayer hath its wished accomplishment. Eustathius.

V. 438. Presumptuous Troy mistook the sign.] The thunder of Jupiter is designed as a mark of his acceptance of Nestor's prayers, and a sign of his favour to the Greeks. However, there being nothing in the prodigy particular to the Greeks, the Trojans expound it in their own favour, as they seem warranted by their present success. This self partiality of men in appropriating to themselves the protection of heaven, has always been patural to them. In the same manner Virgil makes Turnus explain the transformation of the Trojan ships into nymphs, as an ill omen to the Trojans.

As, when black tempests mix the seas and skies,
The roaring deeps in wat'ry mountains rise,
Above the sides of some tall ship ascend,
Its womb they deluge, and its ribs they rend:
Thus loudly roaring, and o'er-pow'ring all,
Mount the thick Trojans up the Grecian wall;
Legions on legions from each side arise:
Thick sound the keels; the storm of arrows slies:
Fierce on the ships above, the cars below,
These wield the mace, and those the jav'lin throw.
While thus the thunder of the battle rag'd,
450

And lab'ring armies round the works engag'd;
Still in the tent Patroclus fate, to tend
The good Eurypylus, his wounded friend.
He fprinkles healing balms, to anguish kind,
And adds discourse, the med'cine of the mind.

Trojanos hæc monstra petunt, his Jupiter ipse Auxilium solitum eripuit.

History furnishes many instances of oracles, which, by reason of this partial interpretation, have proved an occasion to lead men into great missortunes: It was the case of $Cr\alpha sus$ in his wars with Cyrus; and a like mistake engaged Pyrrbus to make war upon the Romans.

V. 448. On the ships above, the cars below.] This is a new fort of battle, which Homer has never before mentioned; the Greeks on their ships, and the Trojans in their chariots, fight as on a plain. Eustathius.

455

16

n

m

to

O

to ri de But when he saw, ascending up the fleet,

Victorious Troy: Then, starting from his seat,
With bitter groans his sorrows he exprest,
He wrings his hands, he beats his manly breast.
Tho' yet thy state requires redress (he cries)
Depart I must: What horrors strike my eyes?
Charg'd with Achilles' high commands I go,
A mournful witness of this scene of woe:
I haste to urge him, by his country's care,
To rise in arms, and shine again in war.

465
Perhaps some fav'ring God his soul may bend;
The voice is pow'rful of a faithful friend.

He spoke; and speaking, swifter than the wind
Sprung from the tent, and lest the war behind.
Th' embody'd Greeks the sierce attack sustain,
But strive, tho' num'rous, to repulse in vain.
Nor could the Trojans, thro' that sirm array,
Force to the sleet and tents, th' impervious way.

V 472. Nor could the Trojans—Force to the fleet and tents th' impervious way.] Homer always marks distinctly the place of battle; he here shews us clearly, that the Trojans attacked the first line of the fleet that stood next the wall, or the vessels which were drawn foremost on the land: these vessels were a strong rampart to the tents which were pitch'd behind, and to the other line of the navy which stood nearer to the sea; to penetrate therefore to the tents, they must necessarily force the first line, and defeat the troops which defended it. Eustathius.

As when a shipwright with Palladian art, Smooths the rough wood, and levels ev'ry part; 475 With equal hand he guides his whole defign, By the just rule, and the directing line: The martial leaders with like skill and care, Preserv'd their line, and equal kept the war. Brave deeds of arms thro' all the ranks were try'd, 480 And ev'ry ship sustain'd an equal tide. At one proud bark, high-tow'ring o'er the fleet, Ajax the great, and god-like Hector meet: For one bright prize the matchless chiefs contend, Nor this the ships can fire, nor that defend; 485 One kept the shore, and one the vessel trod; That fix'd as fate, this acted by a God. The fon of Clytius in his daring hand, The deck approaching, shakes a flaming brand; But pierc'd by Telamon's huge lance expires; 490 Thund'ring he falls, and drops th' extinguish'd fires. Great Hector view'd him with a fad furvey, As stretch'd in dust before the stern he lay. Oh! all of Trojan, all of Lycian race! Stand to your arms, maintain this arduous space. Lo! where the fon of royal Clytius lies, Ah fave his arms, fecure his obsequies! This said, his eager jav'lin sought the foe: But Ajax shunn'd the meditated blow.

A

C

I

T

T

R

W

A

Be

TI

TI

Cl

(T

Dr

Th

BOOK XV. HOMER'S ILIAD.	65
Not vainly yet the forceful lance was thrown:	500
It stretch'd in dust unhappy Lycophron:
An exile long, fustain'd at Ajax' board,	4
A faithful servant to a foreign Lord;
In peace, in war, for ever at his fide,
	505
From the high poop he tumbles on the fand,
And lies, a lifeless load, along the land.
With anguish Ajax views the piercing fight,
And thus inflames his brother to the fight.
	510
Our friend, our lov'd companion! now no more!	,
Dear as a parent, with a parent's care,
To fight our wars, he left his native air.
This death deplor'd to Hector's rage we owe;
	515
Where are those darts on which the fates attend?),)
And where the bow, which Phæbus taught to bend	,
Impatient Teucer hast'ning to his aid,
Before the chief his ample bow display'd;
	20
Then his'd his arrow and the bow-string sung.
Clytus, Pifenor's fon, renown'd in fame,
(To thee, Polydamas! an honour'd name)
Drove thro' the thickest of th' embattel'd plains
The startling steeds, and shook his eager reins.	25
Vor. IV H	Δο

As all on glory ran his ardent mind, The pointed death arrests him from behind: Thro' his fair neck the thrilling arrow flies: In youth's first bloom reluctantly he dies. Hurl'd from the lofty feat, at distance far, 530 The headlong coursers spurn his empty car: 'Till fad Polydamas the steeds restrain'd, And gave, Aftynous, to thy careful hand; Then, fir'd to vengeance, rush'd amidst the foe; Rage edg'd his fword, and strengthen'd ev'ry blow. 535 Once more bold Teucer, in his country's cause, At Hedor's breast a chosen arrow draws; And had the weapon found the destin'd way, Thy fall, great Trojan! had renown'd that day. But Hedor was not doom'd to perish then: Th' all-wife Disposer of the fates of men, (Imperial Towe) his present death withstands; Nor was fuch glory due to Teucer's hands. At his full stretch as the tough string he drew, Struck by an arm unfeen, it burft in two; Down dropp'd the bow: the shaft with brazen head Fell innocent, and on the dust lay dead. Th' aftonish'd archer to great Ajax cries; Some God prevents our destin'd enterprize: Some God, propitious to the Trojan foe, Has, from my arm unfailing, ftruck the bow,

And

Y

Be

A

Fo

Fre

Inc

W

And broke the nerve my hands had twin'd with art, Strong to impel the flight of many a dart.

Since heav'n commands it (Ajax made reply)

Dismiss the bow, and lay thy arrows by;

Thy arms no less suffice the lance to wield,

And quit the quiver for the pond'rous shield.

In the first ranks indulge thy thirst of same,

Thy brave example shall the rest instame.

Fierce as they are, by long successes vain;

To force our sleet, or ev'n a ship to gain,

Asks toil, and sweat, and blood: Their utmost might Shall find its match---No more: 'Tis ours to fight.

Then Teucer laid his faithless bow aside;
The four-fold buckler o'er his shoulder ty'd;
On his brave head a crested helm he plac'd,
With nodding horse-hair formidably grac'd;
A dart, whose point with brass resulgent shines,
The warrior wields; and his great brother joins.

This Hector saw, and thus express'd his joy. Ye troops of Lycia, Dardanus, and Troy! Be mindful of yourselves, your ancient same, And spread your glory with the navy's stame. Jove is with us; I saw his hand, but now, From the proud archer strike his vaunted bow. Indulgent Jove! how plain thy savours shine, When happy nations bear the marks divine!

575

570

How easy then, to see the finking state Of realms accurft, deferted, reprobate! Such is the fate of Greece, and fuch is ours: 580 Behold, ye warriors, and exert your pow'rs. Death is the worst; a fate which all must try; And, for our country, 'tis a blifs to die. The gallant man, tho' flain in fight he be, Yet leaves his nation safe, his children free ; 585 Entails a debt on all the grateful state; His own brave friends shall glory in his fate; His wife live honour'd, all his race succeed; And late posterity enjoy the deed!

V. 582. Death is the worst, &c.] 'Tis with very great address, that, to the bitterness of death, he adds the advantages that were to accrue after it. And the ancients are of opinion, that 'twould be as advantageous for young foldiers to read this leffon, concife as it is, as all the volumes of Tyrtæus, wherein he endeavours to raise the spirits of his countrymen. mer makes a noble enumeration of the parts wherein the happiness of a city consists. For having told us in another place, the three great evils to which a town, when taken, is subject; the slaughter of the men, the destruction of the place by fire, the leading of their wives and children into captivity; now he reckons up the bleffings that are contrary to those ca-To the flaughter of the men indeed he makes no opposition; because it is not necessary to the well-being of a city, that every individual should be faved, and not a man flain. Eustathius.

th

ja

lik

Ti

G

liv

at gri

This rouz'd the foul in ev'ry Trojan breast: 590.

The god-like Ajax next his Greeks addrest.

How long, ye warriors of the Argive race,

(To gen'rous Argos what a dire disgrace!)

How long, on these curs'd confines will ye lie,

Yet undetermin'd, or to live, or die! 595

What hopes remain, what methods to retire,

If once your vessels catch the Trojan fire?

Mark how the slames approach, how near they fall,

How Hector calls, and Troy obeys his call!

Not to the dance that dreadful voice invites,

It calls to death, and all the rage of fights.

'Tis now no time for wisdom or debates;

To your own hands are trusted all your fates:

V. 591. The God-like Ajax next.] The oration of Hector is more splendid and shining than that of Ajax, and also more solemn, from his sentiments concerning the favour and affiflance of Jupiter. But that of Ajax is the more politick, fuller of management, and apter to persuade: For it abounds with no less than seven generous arguments to inspire resolution. He exhorts his people even to death, from the danger to which their navy was exposed, which if once consumed, they were never like to get home. And as the Trojans were bid to die, so he bids his men dare to die likewise; and indeed with great necessity, for the Trojans may recruit after the engagement, but for the Greeks, they had no better way than to hazard their lives; and if they should gain nothing else by it, yet at least they would have a speedy dispatch, not a lingring and dilatory destruction. Eustathius.

And better far, in one decisive strife, 605 One day shall end our labour, or our life; Than keep this hard-got inch of barren fands, Still press'd, and press'd by such inglorious hands. The lift'ning Grecians feel their leader's flame, And ev'ry kindling bosom pants for fame. 610 Then mutual flaughters spread on either side; By Hector here the Phocian Schedius dy'd; There pierc'd by Ajax, funk Laodamas, Chief of the foot, of old Antenor's race. Polydamas laid Otus on the fand, 615 The fierce commander of th' Epeian band. His lance bold Meges at the victor threw; The victor flooping, from the death withdrew; (That valu'd life, O Phabus! was thy care) But Crasmus' bosom took the flying spear: 620 His corps fell bleeding on the flipp'ry shore; His radiant arms triumphant Meges bore. Dolops, the fon of Lampus, rushes on, Sprung from the race of old Laomedon, And fam'd for prowess in a well-fought field; He pierc'd the centre of his founding shield : 625 But Meges, Phyleus' ample breast-plate wore, (Well known in fight on Selles' winding shore, For King Euphetes gave the golden mail, Compact, and firm with many a jointed scale)

Which

F

A

BOOK XV. HOMER'S ILIAD.	171
Which oft, in cities storm'd, and battles won,	630
Had fav'd the father, and now faves the fon.
Full at the Trojan's head he urg'd his lance,
Where the high plumes above the helmet dance,
New-ting'd with Tyrian dye: In dust below
Shorn from the crest, the purple honours glow.	635
Mean time their fight the Spartan King survey'd,
And stood by Meges' side, a sudden aid,
Thro' Dolops' shoulder urg'd his forceful dart,
Which held its paffage thro' the panting heart,	177.
And issu'd at his breast. With thund'ring found	640
The warrior falls, extended on the ground.
In rush the conqu'ring Greeks to spoil the slain;
But Hector's voice excites his kindred train;	A SALES
The hero most, from Hicetain sprung,
Fierce Menalippus, gallant, brave, and young.	645
He (ere to Troy the Grecians cross'd the main)
Fed his large oxen on Percote's plain;
But when oppress'd, his country claim'd his care,
Return'd to Ilion, and excell'd in war:
For this, in Priam's court he held his place,	550
Belov'd no less than Priam's royal race.
Him Hector fingled, as his troops he led,
And thus inflam'd him, pointing to the dead.
Lo Menalippus! lo where Dolops lies;

H 4

And is it thus our royal kinsman dies?

O'ermatch'd

655

172 ' HOMER'S ILIAD. BOOK XV.

O'ermatch'd he falls; to two at once a prey, And lo! they bear the bloody arms away! Come on --- a distant war no longer wage, But hand to hand thy country's foes engage: 'Till Greece at once, and all her glory end; Or Ilion from her tow'ry height descend, Heav'd from the lowest stone; and bury all In one sad sepulchre, one common fall. Hedor (this faid) rush'd forward on the foes: With equal ardour Menalippus glows: 665 Then Ajax thus --- Oh Greeks! respect your fame, Respect yourselves, and learn an honest shame: Let mutual rev'rence mutual warmth inspire, And catch from breast to breast the noble fire. On valour's fide the odds of combat lie, 670 The brave live glorious, or lamented die; The wretch that trembles in the field of fame, Meets death, and worse than death, eternal shame. His gen'rous sense he not in vain imparts; It funk, and rooted in the Grecian hearts. 675 They join, they throng, they thicken at his call, And flank the navy with a brazen wall;

Shields

V

A

V

T

T

T

th

to fo,

Po

V. 677. And flank the navy with a brazen wall.] The Poet has built the Grecians a new fort of wall out of their arms; and perhaps one might say, 'twas from this

Shields touching shields, in order blaze above,
And stop the Trojans, tho' impell'd by Jove.

The siery Spartan sirst, with loud applause,
Warms the bold son of Nestor in his cause.

Is there (he said) in arms a youth like you,
So strong to sight, so active to pursue?

Why stand you distant, nor attempt a deed?

List the bold lance, and make some Trojan bleed. 685

He said, and backward to the lines retir'd;
Forth rush'd the youth, with martial sury sir'd,
Beyond the foremost ranks; his lance he threw,
And round the black battalions cast his view.
The troops of Troy recede with sudden sear,
690
While the swift jav'lin his'd along in air.
Advancing Menalippus met the dart
With his bold breast, and selt it in his heart:
Thund'ring he salls; his salling arms resound,
And his broad buckler rings against the ground.
The victor leaps upon his prostrate prize;
Thus on a roe the well breath'd beagle slies,
And rends his side, fresh-bleeding with the dart
The distant hunter sent into his heart.

this passage Apollo borrowed that oracle which he gave to the Athenians about their wall of wood; in like manner the Spartans were said to have a wall of bones: If so, we must allow the God not a little obliged to the Poet. Eustathius.

the units Feller 19 th

Observing Hector to the rescue flew; 700 Bold as he was, Antilochus withdrew: So when a favage, ranging o'er the plain, Has torn the shepherd's dog, or shepherd swain; While conscious of the deed, he glares around, And hears the gath'ring multitude refound, 705 Timely he flies the yet untafted food, And gains the friendly shelter of the wood. So fears the youth; all Troy with shouts pursue, While stones and darts in mingled tempests flew; But enter'd in the Grecian ranks, he turns 710 His manly breaft, and with new fury burns. Now on the fleet the tides of Trojans drove, Fierce to fulfil the stern decrees of Jove: The Sire of Gods, confirming Thetis' prayer, The Grecian ardor quench'd in deep despair; But lifts to glory Troy's prevailing bands, Swells all their hearts, and strengthens all their hands. On Ida's top he waits with longing eyes, To view the navy blazing to the skies; Then, nor till then, the scale of war shall turn, 720 The Trojans fly, and conquer'd Ilion burn. These fates revolv'd in his almighty mind,

Bids

h

3

2

CC

ap

eq

ma

any

ma

V. 723. He raises Hector, &c.] This picture of Hector, impuls'd by Jupiter, is a very finished piece, and

He raises Hector to the work design'd,

Bids him-with more than mortal fury glow,
And drives him, like a light'ning, on the foe.

So Mars, when human crimes for vengeance call,
Shakes his huge jav'lin, and whole armies fall.
Not with more rage a conflagration rolls,
Wraps the vast mountains, and involves the poles.
He foams with wrath; beneath his gloomy brow

730
Like fiery meteors his red eye-balls glow:
The radiant helmet on his temples burns,
Waves when he nods, and lightens as he turns:
For Jove his splendor round the Chief had thrown,
And cast the blaze of both the hosts on one.

735
Unhappy glories! for his fate was near,
Due to stern Pallas, and Pelides' spear:

Yet

and excels all the drawings of this hero which Homer has given us in so various attitudes. He is here reprefented as an instrument in the hand of Jupiter, to bring about those designs the God had long projected: And as his fatal hour now approaches, Fove is willing to recompense his hafty death with this short-lived glory. Accordingly this being the last scene of victory he is to appear in, the Poet introduces him with all imaginable pomp, and adornshim with all the terror of a conqueror: His eyes sparkles with fire, his mouth foams with fury, his figure is compared to the God of War, his rage is equalled to a conflagration and a fform, and the destruction he causes is resembled to that which a lion makes among the herds. The Poet, by this heap of comparisons, raises the idea of the hero higher than any simple description could reach.

V. 736.—His fate was near—Due to stern Pallas.] It may be asked, what Pallas has to do with the Fates, or

301 N

Yet Jove deferr'd the death he was to pay,

And gave what fate allow'd, the honours of a day l

Now all on fire for fame, his breaft, his eyes

Burn at each foe, and fingle ev'ry prize;

Still at the closest ranks, the thickest fight,

He points his ardour, and exerts his might.

The Grecian Phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,

On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power:

So some tall rock o'erhangs the hoary main,

By winds affail'd, by billows beat in vain,

Unmov'd it hears, above, the tempest blow,

And sees the wat'ry mountains break below.

Girt in surrounding slames, he seems to fall

Like fire from Jove, and burst upon them all:

Bursts as a wave that from the clouds impends,

And swell'd with tempests on the ship descends;

ed as particular to Less' offers landing fathers as White what Power has she over them? Homer speaks thus, because Minerwa has already resolved to succour Achilles, and deceive Hestor in the combat between these two heroes, as we find in book 22. Properly speaking, Pallas is nothing but the knowledge and wisdom of Jove, and it is wisdom which presides over the counsels of his providence; therefore the may be looked upon as drawing all things to the satal term to which they are decreed. Dacier.

V. 752. Bursts as a wave, &c.] Longinus, observing that oftentimes the principal beauty of writing consists in the judicious assembling together of the great circumstances.

White are the decks with foam; the winds aloud Howl o'er the masts, and sing thro' ev'ry shroud: 755 Pale cumstances, and the strength with which they are marked in the proper place, chuses this passage of Homer as a plain instance of it. " Where (fays that " noble critick) in describing the terror of a tempest, " he takes care to express whatever are the accidents " of most dread and horror in such a situation: He is " not content to tell us the mariners were in danger, " but he brings them before our eyes, as in a picture, " upon the point of being every moment overwhelmed " by every wave; nay, the very words and fyllables " of the description give us an image of their peril." He shews, that a Poet of less judgment would amuse himself in less important circumstances, and spoil the whole effect of the image by minute, ill-chosen, or fuperfluous particulars. Thus Aratus endeavouring to refine upon that line,

And instant death on ev'ry wave appears!

He turned it thus,

A stender plank preserves them from their fate.

Which, by flourishing upon the thought, has lost the lostiness and terror of it, and is to far from improving the image, that it lessens and vanishes in his management. By confining the danger to a single line, he has scarce less the shadow of it; and indeed the word preserves takes away even that. The same critick produces a fragment of an old poem on the Arimaspians, written in this salse taste, whose author, he doubts not, imagined he had said something wonderful in the following affected verses. I have done my best to give them the

Pale, trembling, tir'd, the failors freeze with fears;
And instant death on ev'ry wave appears.
So pale the Greeks the eyes of Hedor meet,
The chief fo thunders, and fo shakes the fleet.

As when a lion, rushing from his den,

Amidst the plain of some wide water'd fen,

(Where num'rous oxen, as at ease they seed,

At large expatiate o'er the ranker mead;)

Leaps on the herds before the herdsmen's eyes;

The trembling herdsman far to distance slies:

Some lordly bull (the rest dispers'd and sled)

He singles out; arrests, and lays him dead.

Thus from the rage of Jove-like Hestor slew

All Greece in heaps; but one he seiz'd, and slew.

Mycenæan Periphes, a mighty name,

770

In wisdom great, in arms well known to same:

fame turn, and I believe there are those who will not think them bad ones.

'Ye pow'rs! what madness! How on ships so frail, (Tremendous thought!) can thoughtless mortals fail?

' For stormy seas they quit the pleasing plain,

· Plant woods in waves, and dwell amidit the main.

Far o'er the deep (a trackless path) they go,

And wander oceans, in pursuit of woe.

No ease their hearts, no rest their eyes can find,

On heav'n their looks, and on the waves their mind;

· Sunk are their spirits, while their arms they rear;

And gods are weary'd with their fruitless pray'r."

The

F

F

S

(

A

F

V

N

M

(

A

M

Book XV.	HOMER's	ILIAD.	179
The minister of	ftern Euryftheus	ire in a fage
Against Alcides,	Copreus, was his	s fire:
The fon redeem	d the honours of	the race,
A fon as gen'rou	is as the fire was	base;	775
O'er all his cou	ntry's youth conf	spicuous far
In ev'ry virtue,	or of peace or v	var:
But doom'd to I	Hector's stronger	force to yield;
Against the mar	gin of his ample	shield
He struck his ha	fly foot: his he	els up-sprung;	78
Supine he fell;	his brazen helme	et rung.
On the fall'n Ch	ief th' invading	Trojan prest,
And plung'd the	pointed jav'lin i	n his breast.
His circling frie	nds, who strove t	o guard too late
Th' unhappy he	ero, fled, or shar's	d his fate.	785
Chas'd from t	the foremost line,	the Grecian train	1
Now man the ne	ext, receding tow	'rd the main:
Wedg'd in one b	oody at the tents	they stand,
Wall'd round w	ith sterns, a gloom	my desp'rate band	1.
Now manly sha	me forbids th' in	glorious flight;	790
Now fear itself o	confines them to	the fight:
Man courage br	eathes in man; 1	out Neftor most
(The fage prefe	rver of the Greci	ian host)
Exhorts, adjures	, to guard these	utmost shores;
And by their pa	rents, by themfel	lves, implores.	795
O friends! be	e men: your gen	rous breafts infla	me
With mutual ho	onour, and with	mutual shame!
			hink

V. 796 Neftor's Speech.] This popular harangue of Neftor is justly extolled as the strongest and most persuasive

Think of your hopes, your fortunes; all the care
Your wives, your infants, and your parents share:
Think of each living father's rev'rend head;
800
Think of each ancestor with glory dead;
Absent, by me they speak, by me they sue;
They ask their safety and their same from you:
The Gods their fates on this one action lay,
And all are lost, if you desert the day.

five piece of oratory imaginable. It contains in it every motive by which men can be affected; the preservation of their wives and children, the secure possession of their fortunes, the respect of their living parents, and the due regard for the memory of those that were departed: By these he diverts the Grecians from any thoughts of flight in the article of extreme peril. Eustathius.

This noble exhortation is finely imitated by Taffo,

Jerusalem, l. 10.

- O valoroso, hor via conquesta Faccia, a ritor la preda a noi rapita. L'imagine ad a'cuno in mente desta, Glie la figura quafi, e glie l' addita De la pregante patria e de la mesta Supplice famiglivola sbigottita. Credi (dicea) che la tua patria spieghi Per la mia lingua in tai parole i preghi. Guarda tu le mie leggi, e i sacri tempi Fà, ch'io del sangue mio non bagni, e lavi, Assicura le virgini da gli empi, E i sepolchri, e le cinere de gli avi. A te piangendo i lor passati tempi Mostran la bianca chioma i vecchi gravi: A tè la moglie, e le mammelle, e l petto, Le cune, e i figli, e l marital sua letto.

P

F

N

B

H

T

D

T

Ho

firt

no

pit

Eu

He spoke, and round him breath'd heroic fires; Minerva seconds what the fage inspires. The mist of darkness Tove around them threw She clear'd, restoring all the war to view : A fudden ray shot beaming o'er the plain, And shew'd the shores, the navy, and the main. Hector they faw, and all who fly or fight, The scene wide op'ning to the blaze of light. First of the field, great Ajax strikes their eyes, His port majestick, and his ample size: 815 A pond'rous mace, with study of iron crown'd, Full twenty cubits long, he fwings around. Nor fights like others fix'd to certain stands, But looks a moving tow'r above the bands; High on the decks, with vast gigantick stride, 820 The god-like hero stalks from fide to fide. So when a horseman from the wat'ry mead (Skill'd in the manage of the bounding steed) Drives four fair coursers, practis'd to obey, To some great city thro' the publick way; 825 Safe

V. 814. First of the field, gr at Ajax.] In this book, Homer, to raise the valour of Hector, gives him Neptune for an antagonist; and to raise that of Ajax, he first opposed to him Hector, supported by Apollo, and now the same Hector impelled and seconded by Jupiter/himself. These are strokes of a master-hand. Eustathius.

V. 824. Drives four fair coursers, &c.] The comparison

B

S

T

T

T

N As As

G

Fir

Th

Th

mer

Pro

mig

fat

Safe in his art, as fide by fide they run,
He shifts his seat, and vaults from one to one;
And now to this, and now to that he slies;
Admiring numbers follow with their eyes.
From ship to ship thus Ajax swiftly slew,
No less the wonder of the warring crew.
As furious Hestor thunder'd threats aloud,
And rush'd enrag'd before the Trojan crowd:
Then swift invades the ships, whose beaky prores
Lay rank'd contiguous on the bending shores.

835

rison which Homer here introduces, is a demonstration that the art of mounting and managing horses was brought to fo great a perfection in these early times, that one man could manage four at once, and leap from one to the other, even when they ran full speed. But some object, That the custom of riding was not known in Greece at the time of the Trojan war: Besides, they say that the comparison is not just, for the horses are said to run full speed, whereas the ships stand firm and unmoved. Had Homer put the comparison in the mouth of one of his heroes, the objection had been just, and he guilty of an inconsistency; but it is he himself who speaks: Saddle horses were in use in his age, and any poet may be allowed to illustrate pieces of antiquity by images familiar to his own times. This is sufficient for the first objection; nor is the second more reasonable; for it is not absolutely necessary that comparisons should correspond in every particular, it fuffices if there be a general resemblance. This is only introduced to shew the agility of Ajax, who pasfes fwiftly from one veffel to another, and is therefore entirely just. Eustathius.

So the strong eagle from his airy height, Who marks the swans or cranes embody'd flight, Stoops down impetuous, while they light for food, And stooping darkens with his wings the flood. Tove leads him on with his almighty hand; 840 And breathes fierce spirits in his following band. The warring nations meet, the battle roars, Thick beats the combat on the founding prores. Thou would'ft have thought, fo furious was their fire, No force could tame them, and no toil could tire; 845 As if new vigour from new fights they won, And the long battle was but then begun. Greece yet unconquer'd, kept alive the war, Secure of death, confiding in despair; Troy in proud hopes already view'd the main 850 Bright with the blaze, and red with heroes flain: Like strength it felt from hope, and from despair; And each contends, as his were all the war. 'Twas thou, bold Hettor! whose resistless hand

'Twas thou, bold Hedor! whose resistless hand
First seiz'd a ship on that contested strand;
The same which dead Protesilaüs bore,
The first that touch'd th' unhappy Trojan shore.

V. 856. The same which dead Protesilaus bore.] Homer seigns that Hector laid hold on the ship of the dead Protesilaus, rather than on that of any other, that he might not disgrace any of his Grecian Generals. Eustathius.

For this in arms the warring nations stood, And bath'd their gen'rous breafts with mutual blood. No room to poize the lance, or bend the bow; But hand to hand, and man to man they grow: Wounded, they wound; and feek each others hearts With faulchions, axes, fwords, and shorten'd darts. The faulchions ring, shields rattle, axes found, Swords flash in air, or glitter on the ground: 865 With streaming blood the slipp'ry shores are dy'd, And flaughter'd heroes swell the dreadful tide. Still raging Hedor with his ample hand Grasps the high stern, and gives his loud command. Haste, bring the slames! the toil of ten long years

Is finish'd; and the day desir'd appears! This happy day with acclamations greet, Bright with destruction of yon' hostile fleet. The coward-counsels of a tim'rous throng Of rev'rend dotards, check'd our glory long:

875 Too

871

V. 874. The coward-counsels of a tim'rous throng Of rev'rend dotards-]

Homer adds this with a great deal of art and prudence, to answer beforehand all the objections which he well foresaw would be made, because Hector never till now attacks the Grecians in their camp, or endeavours to burn their navy. He was retained by the elders of Troy, who, frozen with fear at the fight of Achilles, never suffered him to march from the ramparts. Our Author forgets nothing that has the refemblance of truth: Too long Jove lull'd us with lethargic charms, But now in peals of thunder calls to arms; In this great day he crowns our full defires, Wakes all our force, and feconds all our fires.

He spoke—the warriors, at his fierce command, 880 Pour a new deluge on the Grecian band. Ev'n Ajax paus'd (fo thick the jav'lins fly) Stepp'd back, and doubted or to live, or die. Yet where the oars are plac'd, he stands to wait What Chief approaching dares attempt his fate: 885 Ev'n to the last his naval charge defends, Now shakes his spear, now lifts, and now protends; Ev'n yet, the Greeks with piercing shouts inspires, Amidst attacks, and deaths, and darts, and fires.

truth; but he had yet a farther reason for inserting this, as it exalts the glory of his principal hero: These elders of Troy thought it less difficult to defeat the Greeks defended with strong entrenchments, while Achilles was not with them; than to overcome them without entrenchments when he affifted them. And this is the reason that they prohibited Hector before, and permit him now, to fally on the enemy. Dacier.

V. 877. But now Jove calls to arms, &c.] Hector feems to be fensible of an extraordinary impulse from heaven, fignified by these words the most mighty hand of Jove pushing him on. It is no more than any other person would be ready to imagine, who should rife from a state of distress or indolence, into one of good fortune, vigour, and activity. Eustathius.

O friends! O heroes! names for ever dear, Once fons of Mars, and thunderbolts of war!

Ah!

890

V. 890. The speech of Ajax.] There is great strength, closeness, and spirit in this speech, and one might (like many criticks) employ a whole page in extolling and admiring it in general terms. But fure the perpetual rapture of fuch commentators, who are always giving us exclamations instead of criticisms, may be a mark of great admiration, but of little judgment, Of what use is this either to a reader who has a taste, or to one who has not? To admire a fine passage is what the former will do without us. However we ought gratefully to acknowledge the good-nature of most people, who are not only pleased with this superficial applause given to fine passages, but are likewise inclined to transfer to the critick, who only points at these beauties, part of the admiration justly due to the This is a cheap and easy way to fame, which many writers both ancient and modern have purfued with great fuccess. Formerly indeed this fort of authors had modesty, and were humbly content to call their performance only Florilegia or Posies: But some of late have pass'd such collections on the world for criticisms of great depth and learning, and seem to expect the same flowers should please us better in those paltry nofegays, of their own making up, than in the native gardens where they grew. As this practice of extolling without giving reasons is very convenient for most writers, fo it excellently fuits the ignorance or laziness of most readers, who will come into any sentiment, rather than take the trouble of refuting it. Thus the compliment is mutual: For as such criticks do not tax their readers with any thought to understand them, so their readers in return advance nothing in opposition to such criticks. They may go roundly on, admiring and exclaiming in this manner; What an exquifite spirit of poetry—How beautiful a circumstance— What

W. No

No

A

Th Th Ti

Far F But

Wh Aga So v

ull

The

What oetmag nd

ourf

nor

Ah! yet be mindful of your old renown,
Your great forefathers virtues and your own.
What aids expect you in this utmost strait?
What bulwarks rising between you and fate?
No aids, no bulwarks your retreat attend,
No friends to help, no city to defend.
This spot is all you have, to lose or keep;
There stand the Trojans, and here rolls the deep.
Tis hostile ground you tread; your native lands 900
Far, far from hence: your fates are in your hands.

Raging he spoke; nor farther wastes his breath,
But turns his jav'lin to the work of death.
Whate'er bold Trojan arm'd his daring hands
Against the sable ships with slaming brands,
So well the chief his naval weapon sped,
The luckless warrior at his stern lay dead:
Full twelve, the boldest, in a moment fell,
Sent by great Ajax to the shades of hell.

What delicacy of sentiments—With what art has the Poet—In how sublime and just a manner—How finely magined—How wonderfully heautiful and poetical—And so proceed, without one reason to interrupt the ourse of their eloquence, most comfortably and gnorantly apostrophising to the end of the chapter.

HOMEP'S PLAYED. 11: We consider the rates to dark the second 180 aviousophia must pendritast avign A CAMPANE THE CAMPANE AND THE CONTRACTOR and the state of t is in the our talking control with they have a read expense. A CONTRACTOR OF CALL Company of the part of the party and The state of the s S. Marketter Street, S the state of the same of the same of the same the state of the s Security and white rest of the line of the Patroclus Mov'd with & Misfortunes of & Greeks & having obtain'd have of Achilles to go to their relief puts on y armor of that Prince who makes Libations to Jupiter for his happy Return.

B. 6

G

THE

SIXTEENTH BOOK

the former time charteer one to content him, if suite

OFTHE

I L I A D.

of the second control of the second control to the second control

The ARGUMENT.

The fixth battle: The acts and death of Patroclus.

DATROCLUS (in pursuance of the request of Nestor in the eleventh book) intreats Achilles to fuffer him to go to the affistance of the Greeks with Achilles's troops and armour. He agrees to it, but at the same time charges him to content himself with refcuing the fleet, without farther pursuit of the enemy. The armour, horses, soldiers, and officers of Achilles are described. Achilles offers a libation for the success of his friend, after which Patroclus leads the Myrmidons to battle. The Trojans at the fight of Patroclus in Achilles's armour, taking him for that hero, are cast into the utmost consternation: He beats them off from, the veffels, Hector himself flies, Sarpedon is killed, tho' Iupiter was averse to his fate. Several other particulars of the battle are described; in the heat of which, Patroclus, neglecting the orders of Achilles, pursues the foe to the walls of Troy; where Apollo repulses and disarms him. Euphorbus wounds him, and Hector kills him: which concludes the book.

THE

Me.

chara

THE

*SIXTEENTH BOOK

OF THE

I L I A D.

So warr'd both armies on th' enfanguin'd shore, While the black vessels smoak'd with human gore.

Meantime Patroclus to Achilles flies; The streaming tears fall copious from his eyes;

Not

* We have at the entrance of this book one of the most beautiful parts of the Iliad. The two different characters are admirably sustained in this dialogue of I 2

Not faster, trickling to the plains below, From the tall rock the fable waters flow,

Divine

i

to fi

fe

A

po

ex

th

A

A

hi

th

In

pe

no

frie

rev

the two heroes, wherein there is not a period but strongly marks not only their natural temper, but that particular disposition of mind in either, which arises from the present state of affairs. We see Patroclus touched with the deepest compassion for the misfortune of the Greeks (whom the Trojans had forced to retreat to their ships, and which ships were on the point of burning) proftrating himself before the vessel of Achilles, and pouring out his tears at his feet. Achilles, struck with the grief of his friend, demands the cause of it. Patroclus, pointing to the ships, where the flames already began to rife, tells him he is harder than the rocks or fea which lay in prospect before them, if he is not touched with fo moving a spectacle, and can see in cold blood his friends perishing before his eyes. As nothing can be more natural and affecting than the speech of Patroclus, so nothing is more lively and picturesque than the attitude he is here described in.

The Pathetic of Patroclus's speech is finely contrafted by the Fierte of that of Achilles. While the former is melting with forrow for his countrymen, the utmost he can hope from the latter is but to borrow his armour and troops; to obtain his personal affiftance he knows is impossible. At the very instant that Achilles is moved to ask the cause of his friend's concern, he feems to fay that nothing could deferve it but the death of their fathers: and in the same breath speaks of the total destruction of the Greeks as of too flight a cause for tears. Patroclus, at the opening of this speech, dares not name Agamemnon even for being wounded; and after he has tried to bend him by all the arguments that could affect an human breast, concludes by supposing that some oracle or supernatural

Divine Pelides, with compassion mov'd, Thus spoke, indulgent to his best belov'd.

or war and have aster hote

Patroclus,

fupernatural inspiration is the cause that with-holds What can match the fierceness of his anhis arms. fwer: Which implies, that not the oracles of heaven itself should be regarded, if they stood in competition with his refentment: That if he yields, it must be through his own mere motive: the only reason he has ever to yield, is that nature itself cannot support anger eternally: And if he yields now, it is only because he had before determined to do so at a certain time, (11. 9. V. 773.) That time was not till the flames should approach to his own ships, till the last article of danger, and that not of danger to Greece, but to him-Thus his very pity had the sternest qualifications in the world. After all, what is it he yields to? only to fuffer his friend to go in his flead, just to fave them from present ruin, but he expressly forbids him to proceed any farther than barely to put out the fires, and fecure his own and his friends return to their country: And all this concludes with a wish, that (if it were possible) every Greek and every Trojan might perish except themselves. Such is that wrath of Achilles, that more than wrath, as the Greek uning implies, which Homer has painted in fo strong a colouring.

V. 8. Indulgent to his best below'd.] The friendship of Achilles and Patroclus is celebrated by all antiquity: And Homer, notwithstanding the anger of Achilles was his profess'd subject, has found the secret to discover, thro' that very anger, the softer parts of his character. In this view we shall find him generous in his temper, despising gain or booty, and as far as his honour is concerned, fond of his mistres, and easy to his friend: Not proud, but when injured; and not more revengeful when ill used, than grateful and gentle

I :

Paroclus, fay, what grief thy bosom bears, That flows fo fast in these unmanly tears? No girl, no infant whom the mother keeps From her lov'd breaft, with fonder passion weeps;

Not

10

when respectfully treated. " Patroclus (says Philostratus, who probably grounds his affertion on some ancient tradition) "was not fo much elder than Achilles " as to pretend to direct him, but of a tender, modest, " and unaffuming nature; constant and diligent in " his attendance, and feeming to have no affections " but those of his friends." The same author has a very pretty passage, where Ajax is introduced enquiring of Achilles, "Which of all his warlike actions " were the most difficult and dangerous to him? He " answers, Those which he undertook for the sake of " his friends. And which (continues Ajax) were the " most pleasing and easy? The very same, replies " Achilles. He then asks him, Which of all the " wounds he ever bore in battle was the most painful " to him? Achilles answers, That which he received " from Hedor. But Hedor, fays Ajax, never gave " you a wound. Yes, replies Achilles, a mortal one " when he flew my friend Patroclus."

It is faid in the life of Alexander the Great, that when that Prince visited the monuments of the heroes at Troy, and placed a crown upon the tomb of Achilles; his friend Hephæstion placed another on that of Patroclus, as an intimation of his being to Alexander what the other was to Achilles. On which occasion the saying of Alexander is recorded; That Achilles was happy indeed, for having such a Friend to love him living, and fuch a Poet to celebrate him

V. 11. No girl, no infant, &c.] I know the obvious translation of this passage makes the comparison con-

Not more the mother's foul that infant warms,
Clung to her knees, and reaching at her arms,
Than thou hast mine! Oh tell me to what end
Thy melting forrows thus pursue thy friend?

Griev'st thou for me, or for my martial band?

Or come sad tidings from our native land?

Our fathers live, (our first, most tender care)

Thy good Menætius breathes the vital air,

And hoary Peleus yet extends his days;

Pleas'd in their age to hear their children's praise.

Or may some meaner cause thy pity claim?

Perhaps yon' reliques of the Grecian name,

Doom'd in their ships to sink by fire and sword,

And pay the forfeit of their haughty Lord?

Whate'er the cause, reveal thy secret care,

And speak those sorrows which a friend would share.

fift only in the tears of the infant, applied to those of Patroclus. But certainly the idea of the simile will be much finer, if we comprehend also in it the mother's fondness and concern, awakened by this uneasiness of the child, which no less aptly corresponds with the tenderness of Achilles on the sight of his friend's affliction. And there is yet a third branch of the comparison, in that pursuit, and constant application the infant makes to the mother, in the same manner as Patroclus follows Achilles with his grief till he forces him to take notice of it. I think (all these circumstances laid together) nothing can be more affecting or exact in all its views, than this similaride; which, without that regard, has perhaps seemed but low and trivial to an unreflecting reader.

A figh, that instant from his bosom broke, Another follow'd, and Patroclus spoke

Let Greece at length with pity touch thy breaft, Thyself a Greek; and, once, of Greeks the best ! Lo! ev'ry chief that might her fate prevent, Lies pierc'd with wounds, and bleeding in his tent. Eurypylus, Tydides, Atreus' fon, 35 And wife Ulysses at the navy groan More for their country's wounds, than for their own. Their

V. 31. Let Greece at length with pity touch thy breast.] The commentators labour to prove, that the words in the original which begin this speech, Mi vepiéra, Be not angry, are not meant to defire Achilles to bear no farther refentment against the Greeks, but only not to be displeased at the tears which Patroclus shed for their misfortune. Patroclus (they fay) was not so imprudent to begin his intercession in that manner, when there was need of fomething more infinuating. I take this to be an excess of refinement: The purpose of every period in his speech is to persuade Achilles to lay aside his anger; why then may he not begin by defiring it? The whole question is, whether he may speak openly in favour of the Greeks, in the first half of the verse, or in the latter? For in the same line he represents their distress.

τοῖον γὰρ ἄχος βεζίηκεν 'Αχαιές. 'Tis plain he treats him without much referve, calls. him implacable, inexorable, and even mischievous (for alvapern implies no less.) I do not see wherein the caution of this freech consists: it is a generous, unartful petition, whereof Achilles's nature would much more approve, than of all the artifice of Ulysses, to which he expressed his hatred in the ninth book, V. 412.

V. 35 Eurypylus, Tydides, Atreus' fon, And wife Ulysses .___]

Patroclus

Their pain foft arts of pharmacy can ease, Thy breaft alone no lenitives appeafe.

May never rage like thine my foul enflave, O great in vain! unprofitably brave! Thy country flighted in her last distress, What friend, what man, from thee shall hope redress? No-men unborn, and ages yet behind, Shall curse that fierce, that unforgiving mind.

O man unpitying! if of man thy race; But fure thou fpring'ft not from a foft embrace, Nor ever am'rous hero caus'd thy birth, Nor ever tender Goddess brought thee forth. Some rugged rock's hard entrails gave thee form, 50 And raging feas produc'd thee in a storm, Patroclus in mentioning the wounded Princes to Achilles, takes care not to put Agamemnon first, lest that odious name striking his ear on a sudden, should shut it against the rest of his discourse: Neither does he name him last, for fear Achilles, dwelling upon it, should fall into a passion: But he slides it into the middle, mixing and confounding it with the rest, that it might not be taken too much notice of, and that the names which precede and follow it may diminish the hatred it might excite. Wherefore he does not fo much as accompany it with an epithet.

I think the foregoing remark of Eustaibius is very ingenious, and I have given into it so far, as to chuse rather to make Patroclus call him Atreus' fon, than Agamemnon, which yet farther foftens it, fince thus it might as well be imagined he spoke of Menelaus, as of Agamemnon.

A foul well-fuiting that tempestuous kind, So rough thy manners, so untam'd thy mind.

If some dire Oracle thy breast alarm,

If ought from Jove, or Thetis, stop thy arm,

Some beam of comfort yet on Greece may shine,

If I but lead the Myrmidonian line:

Clad in thy dreadful arms if I appear,

Proud Troy shall tremble, and desert the war:

Without thy person Greece shall win the day,

And thy mere image chase her soes away.

Press'd by fresh forces, her o'erlabour'd train

Shall quit the ships, and Greece respire again.

Thus, blind to fate! with supplicating breath, Thou begg'ft his arms, and in his arms thy death. 69

V. 61. And thy mere image chase her foes away] It is hard to conceive a greater compliment, or one that could more touch the warlike ambition of Achilles, than this which Homer puts into the mouth of Patroclus. It was also an encomium which he could not suspect of flattery; fince the person who made it desires to hazard his life upon the fecurity that the enemy could not fupport the fight of the very armour of Achilles: And indeed Achilles himself seems to entertain no less a thought, in the answer to this speech, where he ascribes the flight of Troy to the blazing of his helmet: a circumftance wonderfully fine, and nobly exalting the idea of this hero's terrible character. Besides all this, Homer had it in his view to prepare hereby the wonderful incident that is to enfue in the eighteenth book, where the very fight of Achilles from his ship turns the fortune of the war.

Unfortunately good! a boding figh
Thy friend return'd; and with it, this reply.

Patroclus! thy Achilles knows no fears! Nor words from Tove, nor Oracles he hears: Nor ought a mother's conscience can suggest : The tyrant's pride lies rooted in my breaft. My wrongs, my wrongs, my conftant thought engage, Those, my sole oracles, inspire my rage; I made him tyrant; gave him pow'r to wrong Ev'n me: I felt it; and shall feel it long. 75 The maid, my black-ey'd maid, he forc'd away, Due to the toils of many a well-fought day; Due to my conquest of her father's reign; Due to the votes of all the Grecian train. From me he forc'd her; me, the bold and brave; Difgrac'd, dishonour'd, like the meanest slave. But bear we this—the wrongs I grieve are past: 'Tis time our fury should relent at last: I fix'd its date; the day I wish'd appears: Now Hector to my ships his battle bears, The flames my eyes, the shouts invade my ears. Go then, Patroclus! court fair honour's charms In Troy's fam'd fields, and in Achilles' arms:

Lead forth my martial Myrmydons to fight, Go fave the fleets, and conquer in my right.

See the thin reliques of their baffled band, At the last edge of yon' deserted land!

Behold

90

Behold all llion on their ships descends;

How the cloud blackens, how the storm impends!

It was not thus, when at my sight amaz'd,

Troy saw and trembled, as this helmet blaz'd:

Had not th' injurious King our friendship lost,

Yon' ample trench had bury'd half her host.

No camps, no bulwarks now the Trojans fear,

Those are not dreadful, no Achilles there:

No longer stames the lance of Tydeus' son;

No more your Gen'ral calls his heroes on;

Hector,

V. 101. No longer flames the lance of Tydeus' fon.] By what Achilles here fays, joining Diomede to Agamemnon in this taunting reflection, one may justly fufpect there was some particular disagreement and emulation between these two Heroes. This we may suppose to be the more natural, because Diomede was of all the Greeks confessedly the nearest in fame and courage to Achilles, and therefore the most likely to move his envy, as being the most likely to supply his place. The same fentiments are to be observed in Diomede with regard to Achilles: he is always confident in his own valour, and therefore in the greatest extremities he no where acknowledges the necessity of appealing Achilles, but always in council appears most forward and resolute to carry on the war without him. For this reason he was not thought a fit ambassador to Achilles; and upon return from the embasly, he breaks into a severe reflection, not only upon Achilles, but even upon Agamemnon who had fent this embaffy to him. I wish thou hadst not fent these supplications and gifts to Achilles; his insolence was extreme before, but now his arrogance will be intolerable; let us not mind whether he goes or stays, but do our duty and prepare for the battle. Aathius observes, that Achilles uses this particular expression concerning Diomede,

00

f

Hector, alone, I hear; his dreadful breath
Commands your flaughter, or proclaims your death.
Yet now, Patroclus, iffue to the plain;
Now fave the ships, the rising fires restrain,
And give the Greeks to visit Greece again.
But heed my words, and mark a friend's command
Who trusts his fame and honours in thy hand,
And from thy deeds expects, th' Achaian host
Shall render back the beauteous maid he lost:
Rage uncontroul'd thro' all the hostile crew,
But touch not Hector, Hector is my due.

Tho'

Οὐ γάρ Τυδείδεω Διομήδεος ἐν παλάμησι Μαίνεταὶ ἐγχείη——— because it was the same boasting expression Diomed had applied to himself, Il. 8. V. 111. of the original. But this having been said only to Nestor in the heat of fight, how can we suppose Achilles had notice of it? This observation shews the great diligence, if not the judgment, of the good Archbishop.

V. 111. Shall render back the beauteous maid.] But this is what the Greeks had already offered to do, and which he has refused; this then is an inequality in Achilles's manners. Not at all: Achilles is still ambitious; when he refused these presents, the Greeks were not low enough, he would not receive them till they were reduced to the last extremity, and till he was sufficiently revenged by their losses. Dacier.

V. 113. But touch not Hector] This injunction of Achilles is highly correspondent to his ambitious character: He is by no means willing that the conquest of Hector should be atchieved by any hand but his own: in that point of glory he is jealous even of his dearest friend. This also wonderfully strengthens the idea we have

Tho' fove in thunder should command the war, Be just, consult my glory, and forbear.

The

have of his implacability and refentment; fince at the fame time that nothing can move him to affift the Greeks in the battle, we see it is the utmost force upon his nature to abstain from it, by the fear he manifests lest any other should subdue this hero.

The verse I am speaking of,

Τὰς ἄλλες ἐνάριξ' ἀπὸ δ' Εκτορος ἴσχεο χεῖρας, is cited by Diogenes Laertius as Homer's, but not to be found in the editions before that of Barnes's. It is certainly one of the instructions of Achilles to Patroclus, and therefore properly placed in this speech; but I believe better after,

σοτί δ', ἀγλαὰ δῶρα πόρωσιν than where he has inferted it four lines above: For Achilles's instructions not beginning till V. 83.

Πείθεο δ', ώς τοι έγω μύθε τέλος έν φρεσί θείω, it is not fo proper to divide this material one from the rest. Whereas (according to the method I propose) the whole context will lie in this order. Obey my injunctions, as you consult my interest and honour. Make as great a slaughter of the Trojans as you will, but abstain from Hector. And as soon as you have repulsed them from the ships, be satisfied and return: For it may be satal to pursue the wictory to the walls of Troy.

V. 115. Confult my glory, and forbear.] Achilles tells Patroclus, that if he pursues the foe too far, whether he shall be victor or vanquished, it must prove either way prejudicial to his glory. For by the former, the Greeks having no more need of Achilles's aid, will not restore him his captive, nor try any more to appease him by presents:

The fleet once sav'd, desist from farther chace,
Nor lead to Ilion's walls the Grecian race;
Some adverse God thy rashness may destroy;
Some God, like Phæbus, ever kind to Troy.
Let Greece, redeem'd from this destructive strait,
120
Do her own work, and leave the rest to fate.
Oh! would to all th' immortal pow'rs above,
Apollo, Pallas, and almighty Jove!

That

presents: By the latter, his arms would be left in the enemy's hands, and he himself upbraided with the death of Patroclus, Dacier.

V. 122. Oh! would to all, &c.] Achilles from his overflowing gall vents this execration: The Trojans he hates as professed enemies, and he detests the Grecians as people who had with calmness overlooked his wrongs. Some of the ancient criticks not entering into the manners of Achilles, would have expunged this imprecation, as uttering an universal malevolence to mankind. This violence agrees perfectly with his implacable character. But one may observe at the same time the mighty force of friendship, if for the sake of his dear Patroclus he will protect and secure those Greeks, whose destruction he wishes. What a little qualifies this bloody wish, is, that we may suppose it spoken with great unreservedness, as in secret, and between friends.

Monf. de la Motte has a lively remark upon the abfurdity of this wish. Upon the supposition that Jupiter had granted it, if all the Trojans and Greeks were destroyed, and only Achilles and Patroclus lest to conquer Troy, he asks what would be the victory without any enemies, and the triumph without any spectators? But the answer is very obvious; Homer intends to paint a man in passion; the wishes and schemes of such an one are seldom conformable to reason; and the manners are preserved the better, the less they are represented to be fo.

That not one Trojan might be left alive,

And not a Greek of all the race furvive;

Might only we the vast destruction shun,

And only we destroy th' accursed town!

Such conf'rence held the chiefs: while on the strand, Great Jove with conquest crown'd the Trojan band.

Ajax no more the sounding storm sustain'd, 130

So thick, the darts an iron tempest rain'd:

On

This brings into my mind that curse in Shakespear, where that admirable master of nature makes Northumberland, in the rage of his passion, wish for an universal destruction.

--- 'Now let not nature's hand

' Keep the wild flood confin'd! Let order die,

' And let the world no longer be a stage

'To feed contention in a lingring act:
'But let one spirit of the first-born Cain

Reign in all bosoms, that each heart being set

On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,

And darkness be the burier of the dead!

V. 130. Ajax no more, &c.] This description of Ajax wearied out with battle, is a passage of exquisite life and beauty: Yet what I think nobler than the description itself, is what he says at the end of it, that his hero, even in this excess of fatigue and languor, could scarce be moved from his post by the efforts of a whole army. Virgil has copied the description very exactly, Æn. 9.

Ergo nec clypeo juvenis subsistere tantum
Nec dextra valet: injectis sic undique telis
Obruitur. Strepit assiduo cava tempora circum
Tinnitu galea, & saxis solida æra fatiscunt:
Discussæque jubæ capiti, nec sussicit umbo
Ictibus: ingeminant bastis & Troës & ipse

Fulmineus

On his tir'd arm the weighty buckler hung;
His hollow helm with falling jav'lins rung,
His breath, in quick, short pantings, comes, and goes;
And painful sweat from all his members flows.

135
Spent and o'er-pow'r'd, he barely breathes at most;
Yet scarce an army stirs him from his post:
Dangers on dangers all around him grow,
And toil to toil, and woe succeeds to woe.
Say, muses, thron'd above the starry frame,
How first the navy blaz'd with Trojan slame?
Stern Hestor wav'd his sword; and standing near Where surious Ajax ply'd his ashen spear,
Full on the lance a stroke so justly sped,
That the broad faulchion lopp'd its brazen head:

145

Fulmineus Mnestheus; tum toto corpore sudor Liquitur, & piceum, nec respirare potestus, Flumen agit; sessos quatit æger anhelitus artus.

The circumstances which I have marked in a different character are improvements upon Homer, and the last verse excellently expresses, in the short catching up of the numbers, the quick, short panting, represented in the image. The reader may add to the comparison an imitation of the same place in Tasso, Cant. 9. St. 97.

Fatto intanto hà il soldan cio, ch'e concesso Fare a terrena forza, hor più non puote: Tutto e sangue e sudore; un grave, e spesso Anhelar gli ange il petto, e i sianche scote. Langue sotte lo scudo il brachio oppresso, Gira la destra il ferro in pigre rote; Spessa, e non taglia, e divenendo ottuso Perduto il brando omai di brando ha l'uso.

His pointless spear the warrior shakes in vain;
The brazen head falls sounding on the plain.
Great Ajax saw, and own'd the hand divine,
Confessing Jove, and trembling at the sign;
Warn'd, he retreats. Then swift from all sides pour 150
The hissing brands; thick streams the fiery show'r;
O'er the high stern the curling volumes rise,
And sheets of rolling smoke involve the skies.
Divine Achilles view'd the rising slames,

And fmote his thigh, and thus aloud exclaims.

155 Arm,

V. 148. Great Ajax saw, and own'd the hand divine, Confessing Jove, and trembling at the sign.]
In the Greek there is added an explication of this sign, which has no other allusion to the action, but a very odd one in a single phrase or metaphor.

> —ο ρα πάγχυ μάχης ἐπὶ μήδεα κείρει Ζεὺς ὺψιβρεμέτης, Τρώεσσι δὲ βυλέιο νίκην.

Which may be translated,

So feem'd their hopes cut off by heav'n's high Lord, So doom'd to fall before the Trojan sword.

Chapman endeavours to account for the meanness of this conceit, by the gross wit of Ajax; who seeing the head of his lance cut off, took it into his fancy that Jupiter would in the same manner cut off the counsels and schemes of the Greeks. For to understand this far-fetched apprehension gravely, as the commentators have done, is indeed (to use the words of Chapman) most dull and Ajantical. I believe no man will blame me for leaving these lines out of the text.

V. 154. Achilles view'd the rifing flames.] This event

Arm, arm, Patroclus! Lo, the blaze afpires! The glowing ocean reddens with the fires. Arm, ere our veffels catch the foreading flame: Arm, ere the Grecians be no more a name: I haste to bring the troops--- The hero said : 160 The friend with ardour and with joy obey'd.

He cas'd his limbs in brass, and first around, His manly legs, with filver buckles bound The clasping greaves; then to his breast applies The flamy cuirass, of a thousand dyes; 165 Emblaz'd with studs of gold, his faulchion shone, In the rich belt, as in a starry zone. Achilles' shield his ample shoulders spread, Achilles' helmet nodded o'er his head.

event is prepared with a great deal of art and proba-That effect which a multitude of speeches was not able to accomplish, one lamentable spectacle, the fight of the flames, at length brings to pass, and moves Achilles to compassion. This it was (fay the ancients) that moved the tragedians to make visible representations of misery; for the spectators beholding people in unhappy circumstances, find their souls more deeply touched, than by all the strains of rhetorick. Eustathius.

V. 162. He cas'd his limbs in brass, &c.] Homer does not amuse himself here to describe these arms of Achilles at length, for besides that the time permits it not, he referves this description for the new armour which Thetis shall bring that hero; a description which will be placed in a more quiet moment, and which will give him all the leifure of making it, without requiring any force to introduce it. Eustathius.

Adorn'd in all his terrible array,

He flash'd around intolerable day.

Alone, untouch'd, Pelides' jav'lin stands,

Not to be pois'd but by Pelides' hands:

From Pelion's shady brow the plant entire

Old Chiron rent, and shap'd it for his sire;

Whose son's great arm alone the weapon wields,

The death of heroes, and the dread of fields.

The brave Automedon (an honour'd name,

The second to his Lord in love and same,

In peace his friend, and partner of the war)

180

The winged coursers harnes'd to the car.

V. 172. Alone, untouch'd, Pelides' jav'lin stands.] This passage affords another instance of the stupidity of the commentators, who are here most absurdly inquisitive after the reasons why Patroclus does not take the spear, as well as the other arms, of Achilles? He thought himself a very happy man, who first found out, that Homer had certainly given this spear to Patroclus, if he had not foreseen that when it should be lost in his future unfortunate engagement, Vulcan could not furnish Achilles with another; being no joiner, but only a smith. Virgil, it seems, was not so precisely acquainted with Vulcan's disability to profess the two trades; fince he has, without any scruple, employed him in making a spear, as well as the other arms, for Nothing is more obvious than this thought of Homer, who intended to raise the idea of his hero, by giving him fuch a fpear, as no other could wield: The description of it in this place is wonderfully pompous.

Xanthus and Balius, of immortal breed,
Sprung from the wind, and like the wind in speed;
Whom the wing'd Harpye, swift Podarge, bore,
By Zephyr pregnant on the breezy shore.

185

V. 183. Sprung from the wind.] It is a beautiful invention of the Poet, to represent the wonderful swiftness of the horses of Achilles, by saying they were begotten by the western wind. This fiction is truly poetical, and very proper in the way of natural allegory. However, it is not altogether improbable our Author might have defigned it even in the literal fense: Nor ought the notion to be thought very extravagant in a Poet, fince grave naturalists have seriously vouched the truth of this kind of generation. Some of these relate, as an undoubted piece of natural history, that there was anciently a breed of this kind of horses in Portugal, whole dams were impregnated by a western wind: Varro, Columella, and Pliny, are all of this opi-I shall only mention the words of Pliny, Nat. Hift lib. 8, cap. 42. Conflet in Lustania circa Oly Siponem oppidum, & Tagum amnem, equas favinio flante obversas animalem concipere spiritum, idque partum fieri & gigni pernicissimum See also the same author, 1. 4. c. 22. l. 16. c. 25. Possibly Homer had this opinion in view, which we see has authority more than sufficient to give it place in poetry. Virgil has given us a description of this manner of conception, Georgic 3.

Continuoque avidis ubi subdita stamma medullis, Vere magis (quea vere calor redit ossibus) illæ Ore omnes versæ in zephyrum, stant rupibus altis, Exceptantque leves auras: & sæpe sine ullis Conjugiis, vento gravidæ (mirabile dictu) Saxa per & scopulos & depressas convalles Disfugiunt.---

Swift Pedasus was added to their side,

(Once great Aëtion's, now Achilles, pride)

Who, like in strength, in swiftness, and in grace,

A mortal courser match'd th' immortal race.

A mortal courser match'd th' immortal race.

Achilles speeds from tent to tent, and warms

190

His hardy Myrmidons to blood and arms.

All breathing death, around their chief they stand,

A grim, terrific, formidable band:

Grim as voracious wolves that seek the springs,

When scalding thirst their burning bowels rings.

(When

fharper

V. 186. Swift Pedasus was added to their side.] Here was a necessity for a spare horse (as in another place Nestor had occasion for the same) that if by any misfortune one of the other horses should fall, there might be a fresh one ready at hand to supply his place. This is good management in the Poet, to deprive Achilles, not only of his charioteer and his arms, but of one of his inestimable horses. Eustathius.

V. 194. Grim as voracious wolves, &c.] There is fcarce any picture in Homer so much in the savage and terrible way, as this comparison of the Myrmidons to wolves: It puts one in mind of the pieces of Spagnolett, or Salvator Rosa: Each circumstance is made up of images very strongly coloured, and horribly lively. The principal design is to represent the stern looks and sierce appearance of the Myrmidons, a gaunt and ghastly train of raw-boned bloody-minded sellows. But besides this, the Poet seems to have some farther views in so many different particulars of the comparison: Their eager desire of sight is hinted at by the wolves thirsting after water: Their strength and vigour for the battle is intimated by their being silled with food: And as these beasts are said to have their thirst

(When some tall stag, fresh-slaughter'd in the wood, Has drench'd their wide insatiate throats with blood) To the black sount they rush, a hideous throng, With paunch distended, and with lolling tongue:

sharper after they are gorged with prey; so the Myrmidons are strong and vigorous with ease and refreshment, and therefore more ardently desirous of the combat. This image of their strength is inculcated by several expressions, both in the simile and in the application, and seems designed in contrast to the other Greeks, who are all wasted and spent with toil.

We have a picture much of this kind given us by Milton, lib. 10. where Death is let loofe into the new creation, to glut his appetite and discharge his rage against all nature.

- ' As when a flock

Of fav'nous fowls, tho' many a league remote,

· Against the day of battle, to a field

Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd

' With scent of living carcasses, design'd

' For Death the following day, in bloody fight.

' So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd

' His nostril wide into the murky air,

' Sagacious of his quarry from afar.

And by Taffo, Canto 10. St. 2. of the furious Soldan covered with blood, and thirsting for fresh slaughter.

Come dal chiuso ovil cacciato viene
Lupo tal' hor, che fugge, e si nasconde;
Che se ben del gran ventre omai ripiene
Ha l'ingorde voragini prosonde.
Avido pur di sangue anco suor tiene
La lingua, e'l sugge de la labbra immonde;
Tal' ei sen già dopo il sanguigno stratio
De la sua cupa same anco non satio.

Fire fills their eyes, their black jaws belch the gore, 200 And, gorg'd with slaughter, till they thirst for more. Like furious, rush'd the Myrmidonian crew, Such their dread strength, and such their dreadful view.

High in the midst the great Achilles stands,
Directs their order, and the war commands.

205
He, lov'd of Jove, had launch'd for Ilion's shores
Full fifty vessels, mann'd with fifty oars:
Five chosen leaders the fierce bands obey,
Himself supreme in valour, as in sway.

First march'd Menestheus, of celestial birth,
Deriv'd from thee, whose waters wash the earth,
Divine Sperchius! Jove-descended flood!
A mortal mother mixing with a God.
Such was Menestheus, but miscall'd by fame
The son of Borus, that espous'd the dame.

215

Eudorus next; whom Polymele the gay, Fam'd in the graceful dance, produc'd to day. Her, fly Cyllenius lov'd; on her would gaze, As with swift step she form'd the running maze:

V. 211. Deriv'd from thee, whose waters, &c.] Homer seems resolved that every thing about Achilles shall be miraculous. We have seen his very horses are of celestial origin; and now his commanders, tho' vulgarly reputed the sons of men, are represented as the real offspring of some deity. The Poet thus enhances the admiration of his chief hero by every circumstance with which his imagination could furnish him.

To

H

tho

COL

up

Pri

the

and this

who

V

To her high chamber from Diana's quire,

The God pursu'd her, urg'd, and crown'd his fire.

The son confess'd his father's heav'nly race,
And heir'd his mother's swiftness in the chace.

Strong Echecleus, blest in all those charms

That pleas'd a God, succeeded to her arms;

Not conscious of those loves, long hid from same,
With gifts of price he sought and won the dame;
Her secret offspring to her Sire she bare;
Her Sire cares'd him with a parent's care.

Pisander follow'd; matchless in his art

To wing the spear, or aim the distant dart;

No hand so sure of all th' Emathian line,

Or if a surer, great Patroclus! thine.

The fourth by Phænix' grave command was grac'd;

Laërtes' valiant offspring led the last.

Soon as Achilles with superior care Had call'd the chiefs, and order'd all the war,

V. 220. To her high chamber.] It was the custom of those times to assign the uppermost rooms to the women, that they might be the farther remov'd from commerce: Wherefore Penelope in the Odyssey mounts up into a garret, and there sits to her business. So Priam, in the sixth book, V. 248. had chambers for the Ladies of his court, under the roof of his palace.

The Lacedamonians call'd these high apartments &a, and as the word also signifies eggs, it is probable it was this that gave occasion to the sable of Helen's birth, who is said to be born from an egg. Eustathius,

245

F

T

H

0

Fo

rać

25

This stern remembrance to his troops he gave: '

- "Ye far-fam'd Myrmidons, ye fierce and brave!
- "Think with what threats ye dar'd the Trojan throng,
- "Think what reproach these ears endur'd so long: 241
- "Stern fon of Peleus (thus ye us'd to fay,
- "While restless, raging, in your ships you lay)
- "Oh nurs'd with gall, unknowing how to yield!
- "Whose rage defrauds us of so fam'd a field.
- " If that dire fury must for ever burn,
- "What make we here? Return, ye Chiefs, return!"
 Such were your words—Now warriors grieve no more,
 Lo there the Trojans! bathe your fwords in gore!
 This day shall give you all your foul demands; 250

This day shall give you all your soul demands; Glut all your hearts! and weary all your hands!

Thus while he rous'd the fire in ev'ry breaft, Close, and more close, the list'ning cohorts prest, Ranks wedg'd in ranks of arms a steely ring

Still grows, and spreads, and thickens round the King

As when a circling wall the builder forms,
Of strength defensive against winds and storms,
Compacted stones the thick'ning work compose,

And round him wide the rifing structure grows. So helm to helm, and crest to crest they throng,

Shield urg'd on shield, and man drove man along:

Thick, undistinguish'd plumes, together join'd, Float in one sea, and wave before the wind. Far o'er the rest, in glitt'ring pomp appear
There bold Automedon; Patroclus here; 265
Brothers in arms, with equal fury sir'd;
Two friends, two bodies with one soul inspir'd.

But mindful of the Gods, Achilles went To the rich coffer in his shady tent : There lay on heaps his various garments roll'd, 270 And coftly furs, and carpets stiff with gold. (The prefents of the filver-footed dame) From thence he took a bowl of antique frame, Which never man had flain'd with ruddy wine, Not rais'd in off'rings to the pow'rs divine, 275 But Peleus' fon : and Peleus' fon to none Had rais'd in off'rings, but to Jove alone. This ting'd with fulphur, facred first to flame, He purg'd; and wash'd it in the running stream. Then cleans'd his hands; and fixing for a space 280 His eyes on heav'n, his feet upon the place Of facrifice, the purple draught he pour'd

Oh

V. 283. And thus the God implor'd.] Tho' the character of Achilles every where shews a mind swayed with unbounded passions, and entirely regardless of all human authority and law; yet he preserves a constant respect to the Gods, and appears as zeasous in the sentiments and actions of piety as any hero of the Iliad; who indeed are all remarkable this way. The present passage is an exact description and perfect ritual

Forth in the midft; and thus the God implor'd.

Who

Oh thou supreme! high-thron'd, all high above!

Oh great Pelasgic, Dodonwan Jove! 285

tual of the ceremonies on these occasions. Achilles, tho' an urgent affair called for his friends affishance, would not yet suffer him to enter the fight, till in a most solemn manner he had recommended him to the protection of Jupiter: And this I think a stronger proof of his tenderness and affection for Patroclus, than either the grief he expressed at his death, or the fury he shewed to revenge it.

V. 285. Dodonæan Jove.] The frequent mention of Oracles in Homer and the ancient authors, may make it not improper to give the reader a general account of so considerable a part of the Grecian superstition; which I cannot do better than in the words of my friend Mr. Stanyan, in his excellent and judicious abstract of the Grecian history.

"The Oracles were ranked among the noblest and most religious kinds of divination; the design of them being to settle such an immediate way of converse with their Gods, as to be able with them not only to explain things intricate and obscure, but also to anticipate the knowledge of suture events; and that with far greater certainty than they could hope for from men, who out of ignorance and preinjudice must sometimes either conceal or betray the "truth. So that this became the only fafe way of deliberating upon affairs of any consequence, et ther publick or private. Whether to proclaim was

" or conclude a peace; to institute a new form of go vernment, or enact new laws; all was to be done

"with the advice and approbation of the Oracle

"whose determinations were always held sacred and inviolable. As to the causes of Oracles, Jupite

" was looked upon as the first cause of this, and a other forts of divination; he had the book of fat

before him, and out of that revealed either more

0

(i,

18

1

of

s;

ehe

of eine

Who 'midst surrounding frosts, and vapours chill, Presidest on bleak Dodona's vocal hill:

(Whofe

But to ar-" less as he pleased, to inferior dæmons. gue more rationally, this way of access to the Gods has been branded as one of the earliest and grossest pieces of priestcraft, that obtained in the world. For the priests whose dependence was on the Oracles, when they found the cheat had got sufficient footing, allowed no man to consult the Gods without coitly facrifices and rich prefents to themselves: And as few could bear this expence, it ferved to raife their credit among the common people, by keeping them at an awful distance. And to heighten their esteem with the better and wealthiest fort, even they were only admitted upon a few stated days: By which the thing appeared still more mysterious, and, for want of this good management, must quickly have been feen through, and fall to the ground. But whatever juggling there was as to the religious part, Oracles had certainly a good effect as to the publick; being admirably fuited to the genius of the people, who would join in the most desperate expedition, and admit of any change of government, when they understood by the Oracle it was the irrefiftible will of the Gods. This was the method Minos, Lycurgus, and all the famous lawgivers took; and indeed they found the people fo entirely devoted to this part of religion, that it was generally the easiest and sometimes the only, way of winning them into a compliance. And then they took care to have them delivered in fuch ambiguous terms, as to admit of different constructions according to the exigency of the times; fo that they were generally interpreted to the advantage of the state, unless sometimes there happened to be bribery of flattery in the case; as when Demosthenes complained that the Pythia spoke as Philip would (Whose groves the Selli, race austere! surround, Their feet unwash'd, their slumbers on the ground;

Who

V

f

I

" have her. The most numerous, and of greatest re-" pute, where the Oracles of Apollo, who, in subordi-" nation to Jupiter, was appointed to preside over, " and inspire, all forts of prophets and diviners. " amongst these the Delphian challenged the first " place, not so much in respect of its antiquity, as its " perspicuity and certainty; insomuch that the an-" fwers of the Tripos came to be used proverbially " for clear and infallible truths. Here we must not " omit the first Pythia or priestess of this famous ora-" cle in heroic verse. They found a secret charm in numbers, which made every thing look pompous " and weighty. And hence it became the general " practice of legislators and philosophers, to deliver " their laws and maxims in that drefs: And scarce " any thing in those ages was writ of excellence or " moment but in verse. This was the dawn of poe-" try, which foon grew into repute; and fo long as " it ferved to fuch noble purpofes as religion and go-" vernment, poets were highly honoured, and admit-" ted into a share of the administration. But by that " time it arrived to any perfection, they purfued more " mean and fervile ends; and as they prostituted their " muse, they debased the subject, they sunk propor-" tionably in their esteem and dignity. As to the hi-" flory of Oracles, we find them mentioned in the " very infancy of Greece; and it is as uncertain when " they were finally extinct, as when they began. For "they often loft their prophetick faculty for fome " time, and recovered it again. I know it is a com-" mon opinion, that they were univerfally filenced up-" on our Saviour's appearance in the world: And it " the Devil had been permitted for so many ages to " delude mankind, it might probably have been fo. " But we are affured from history, that several of ce them

Who hear, from rustling oaks, thy dark decrees; 290 And catch the fates, low-whisper'd in the breeze.

Hear,

"them continued till the reign of Julian the apostate,

" and were consulted by him: And therefore I look upon the whole business as of human contrivance;

" an egregious impolture founded upon superstition,

" and carried on by policy and interest, till the " brighter oracles of the holy scriptures dispelled these

" mitts of error and enthusiasm."

V. 285. Pelasgic, Dodonæan Jove.] Achilles invokes Jupiter with these particular appellations, and represents to him the services perform'd by these priests and prophets; making these honours, paid in his own country, his claim for the protection of this Deity. Jupiter was looked upon as the first cause of all divination and oracles, from whence he had the appellation of πανομφαῖος, Il. 8. V. 250. The first Oracle of Dodona was founded by the Pelasgi, the most ancient of all the inhabitants of Greece, which is confirmed by this verse of Hesiod, preserved by the Scholiast Sophocles Trachin.

Δωδώνην, φηγόν τε Πελασγῶν ἔδρανον ἦκεν.

The Oaks of this place were faid to be endowed with voice and prophetick spirit; the priests who gave answers concealing themselves in these trees; a practice which the pious frauds of succeeding ages have rendered not improbable.

V. 288. Whose groves, the Selli, race austere! &c.] Homer seems to me to say clearly enough, that these priests lay on the ground and forbore the bath, to honour by these austerities the God they served; for he says σοὶ ναίνσι ἀνιπτόποδες and this σοὶ can in my opinion only signify for you, that is to say, to please you, and for your bonour. This example is remarkable, but I do not think it singular; and the earliest antiquity may surnish us with the like of pagans, who by an austere life

Hear, as of old! Thou gav'st, at Thetis' pray'r, Glory to me, and to the Greeks despair:

Lo

tried to please their Gods. Nevertheless I am obliged to fay, that Strabo, who speaks at large of these Selli in his seventh book, has not taken this austerity of life for an effect of their devotion, but for a remain of the groffness of their ancestors; who being barbarians, and straying from country to country, had no bed but the earth, and never used a bath. But it is no way unlikely that what was in the first Pelasgians (who founded this oracle) only custom and use, might be continued by these priests thro' devotion. How many things do we at this day fee, which were in their original only ancient manner, and which are continued thro' zeal and a spirit of religion? It is very probable that these priests by this hard living had a mind to attract the admiration and confidence of a people who lov'd luxury and delicacy fo much. I was willing to fearch into antiquity for the origin of these Selli, priests of Jupiter, but found nothing so ancient as Homer: Herodotus writes in his fecond book, that the oracle of Dodona was the ancientest of Greece, and that it was a long time the only one; but what he adds, that it was founded by an Egyptian woman, who was the priestess of it, is contradicted by this passage of Homer, who shews that in the time of the Trojan war this temple was ferved by men called Selli, and not by women. Strabo informs us of a curious ancient tradition, importing, that this temple was at first built in Theffaly, that from thence it was carried into Dodona; that feveral women who had placed their devotion there, followed it; and that in process of time the priestesses used to be chosen from among the descendants of those women. To return to their Selli; Sophocles, who of all the Greek poets is he who has most imitated Homer, speaks in like manner of these priests in one of his plays, where Hercules says to his fon Hillus; "I will declare to thee a new Oracle, " which

Lo to the dangers of the fighting field The best, the dearest of my friends I yield:

295 The

"which perfectly agrees with this ancient one; I myfelf having entered into the facred wood inhabited by the authere Selli, who lie on the ground, writ this answer to the oak, which is confectated to my father fupiter, and which renders his oracles in all

" languages." Dacier.

V. 288. Homer in this verse uses a word which I think fingular and remarkable, υποφήται. I cannot believe that it was put simply for moophiras, but am persuaded that this term includes some particular sense, and shews fome custom but little known, which I would willingly discover. In the Scholia of Didymus there is this remark: "They called those who served in the temple, "and who explain'd the Oracles rendered by the priefts, " bypothets, or under-prophets." It is certain that there were in the temple servitors, or subaltern ministers, who for the fake of gain undertook to explain the Oracles which were obscure. This custom seems very well established in the lon of Euripides; where the young child (after having faid that the priestess is seated on the tripod. and renders the Oracles which Apollo dictates to her) addresses himself to those who serve in the temple, and bids them go and wash in the Castalian fountain, to come again into the temple, and explain the Oracles to those who should demand the explication of them. Homer therefore means to hew, that these Selli were, in the temple of Dodona, those subaltern ministers that interpreted the Oracles. But this, after all, does not appear to agree with the present passage: For, besides. that the custom was not established in Homer's time, and that there is no footstep of it founded in that early age : these Selli (of whom Homer speaks) are not here ministers subordinate to others, they are plainly the chief priefts. The explication of this word therefore must be elsewhere sought, and I shall offer my conjecture, K 5

Tho' still determin'd to my ships consin'd,

Patroclus gone, I stay but half behind.

Oh be his guard thy providential care,

Consirm his heart, and string his arm to war:

Press'd by his single force let Hedor see

His fame in arms, not owing all to me.

But when the sleets are sav'd from soes and sire,

Let him with conquest and renown retire;

Preserve his arms, preserve his social train,

And safe return him to these eyes again!

Great Jove consents to half the chief's request,

But heav'n's eternal doom denies the rest;

To

which I ground upon the nature of this Oracle of Dodona, which was very different from all the other Oracles: In all other temples the priests delivered the Oracles which they had received from their Gods, immediately: But in the temple of Dodona, Jupiter did not utter his Oracles to his priests, but to his Selli; he rendered them to the oaks, and the wonderful oaks rendered them to the priefts, who declared them to those who confulted them: So these priests were not properly προφήται, prophets, fince they did not receive those anfwers from the mouth of their God immediately; but they were ὑποφῆται, under-prophets; because they received them from the mouth of the oaks, if I may fay fo. The oaks, properly speaking, were the prophets, the first interpreters of Jupiter's Oracles; and the Selli were imophitai, under-prophets, because they pro-nounced what the oaks had said. Thus Homer, in one fingle word, includes a very curious piece of antiquity. Dacier.

V. 306. Great Jove consents to half.] Virgil has finely imitated this in his 11th Eneid.

To free the fleet was granted to his pray'r;
His fafe return the winds dispers'd in air.
Back to his tent the stern Achilles slies,
And waits the combat with impatient eyes.

Mean while the troops, beneath Patroclus' care,
Invade the Trojans, and commence the war.
As wasps, provok'd by children in their play,
Pour from their mansions by the broad high-way, 315
In

Audiit & voti Phæbus succedere partem
Mente dedit; partem volucres dispersit in auras.
Sterneret ut subitâ turbatam morte Camillam
Annuit oranti; reducem ut patria alta videret
Non dedit, inque notos vocem vertére procellæ.

V. 314. As wasps, provok'd, &c.] One may obferve, that tho' Homer sometimes takes his similitudes from the meanest and smallest things in nature, yet he orders it so as by their appearance to fignalize and give a lustre to his greatest heroes. Here he likens a body of Myrmidons to a nest of wasps, not on account of their strength and bravery, but of their heat and refentment. Virgil has imitated these humble comparisons, as when he compares the builders of Carthage to bees. Homer has carried it a little farther in another place, where he compares the foldiers to flies, for their bufy industry and perseverance about a dead body; not diminishing his heroes by the fize of these small animals, but raising his comparisons from certain properties inherent in them, which deferve our observation. Euftathius.

This brings into my mind a pretty rural simile in Spencer, which is very much in the simplicity of the old father of poetry.

e

e

t

,

)-

it

In swarms the guiltless traveller engage,
Whet all their stings, and call forth all their rage:
All rise in arms, and with a gen'ral cry
Affert their waxen domes, and buzzing progeny.
Thus from the tents the servent legion swarms,
So loud their clamours, and so keen their arms;
Their rising rage Patroclus' breath inspires,
Who thus inflames them with heroick fires.

O warriors, part'ners of Achilles' praise!

Be mindful of your deeds in ancient days:

Your god-like master let your acts proclaim,

And add new glories to his mighty name.

Think your Achilles sees you fight: Be brave,

And humble the proud monarch whom you save.

Joyful they heard, and kindling as he spoke, 330 Flew to the sleet, involv'd in fire and smoke. From shore to shore the doubling shouts resound, The hollow ships return a deeper sound.

The war stood still, and all around them gaz'd, When great Achilles' shining armour blaz'd: 335

As gentle shepherd in sweet even-tide,

When ruddy Phæbus 'gins to welke in west, High on a hill, his flock to viewen wide,

Marks which do bite their hafty supper best;

A cloud of cumb'rous gnats do him moleft,

' All striving to infix their feeble stings,

'That from their noyance he no whit can rest,

But with his clownish hand their tender wings

' He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.

320

Troy faw, and thought the dread Achilles nigh, At once they see, they tremble and they fly.

Then first thy spear, divine Patroclus! flew, Where the war rag'd, and where the tumult grew. Close to the stern of that fam'd ship which bore 340 Unblest Protefilaus to Ilion's shore, The great Pæonian, bold Pyræchmes, stood: (Who led his bands from Axius' winding flood) His shoulder-blade receives the fatal wound; The groaning warrior pants upon the ground. 345 His troops, that fee their country's glory flain, Fly diverse, scatter'd o'er the distant plain. Patroclus' arm forbids the spreading fires, And from the half-burn'd ship proud Troy retires. Clear'd from the smoak the joyful navy lies, 350 In heaps on heaps the foe tumultuous flies; Triumphant Greece her rescu'd decks ascends. And loud acclaim the starry region rends. So when thick clouds inwrap the mountain's head, O'er heav'n's expanse like one black cieling spread; 355 Sudden

V. 354. So when thick clouds, &c.] All the commentators take this comparison in a sense different from that in which it is here translated. They suppose Jupiter is here described cleaving the air with a stash of lightening, and spreading a gleam of light over a high mountain, which a black cloud had buried in darkness. The application is made to Patroclus salling on the Trojans, and giving respite to the Greeks, who were plunged Sudden the Thund'rer with a flashing ray, Bursts thro' the darkness, and lets down the day: The hills shine out, the rocks in prospect rise, And streams, and vales, and forests strike the eyes;

plunged in obscurity. Eustathius gives this interpretation, but at the same time acknowledges it improper in this comparison to represent the extinction of the flames by the darting of lightening. This explanation is solely founded on the expression genomisepera Zeus, fulgurator Jupiter, which epithet is often applied when no fuch action is is supposed. The most obvious fignification of the words in this passage, gives a more natural and agreeable image, and admits of a juster ap-The simile seems to be of Jupiter disperplication. fing a black cloud which had covered a high mountain, whereby a beautiful prospect, which was before hid in darkness, suddenly appears. This is applicable to the present state of the Greeks, after Patroclus had extinguished the flames, which began to spread clouds of smoak over the fleet. It is Homer's design in his comparisons to apply them to the most obvious and sensible image of the thing to be illustrated; which his commentators too frequently endeavour to hide by moral and allegorical refinements; and thus injure the Poet more, by attributing to him what does not belong to him, and by refusing him what is really his own,

It is much the same image with that of Milton in his second book, tho' applied in a very different way.

· As when from mountain tops the dusky clouds

' Afcending, while the north wind sleeps, o'erspread

' Heav'n's chearful face, the low'ring element

· Scowls o'r the dark'ned landskip snow or show'r;

' If chance the radiant fun with farewel sweet

· Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,

' The birds their notes renew, the bleating herds

· Attest their joy, that hill, and valley rings.

BOOK XVI HOMER'S ILIAD. 227 The finiling scene wide opens to the fight 360 And all th' unmeasur'd Æther flames with light. But Troy repuls'd, and scatter'd o'er the plains, Forc'd from the navy, yet the fight maintains. Now ev'ry Greek some hostile hero slew. But, still the foremost, bold Patroclus flew : 365 As Areilychus had turn'd him round, Sharp in his thigh he felt the piercing wound; The brazen pointed spear, with vigour thrown, The thigh transfix'd and broke the brittle bone: Headlong he fell. Next Thoas was thy chance, 370 Thy breaft, unarm'd, receiv'd the Spartan lance. Phylides' dart, (as Amphiclus drew nigh) His blow prevented, and transpierc'd his thigh, Tore all the brawn, and rent the nerves away ; In darkness, and in death, the warrior lay. 375 In equal arms two fons of Neftor stand, And two bold brothers of the Lycian band: By great Antilochus, Antymnius dies,

By great Antilochus, Antymnius dies,
Pierc'd in the flank, lamented youth! he lies.
Kind Maris, bleeding in his brother's wound,
Defends the breathless carcass on the ground;
Furious he flies, his murd'rer to engage,
But god-like Thrasimed prevents his rage,
Between his arm and shoulder aims a blow;
His arms falls spouting on the dust below:

385

He finks, with endless darkness cover'd o'er, And vents his foul effus'd with gushing gore. Slain by two brothers, thus two brothers bleed, Sarpedon's friends, Amisodarus' feed; Amisodarus, who by furies led, 390 The bane of man, abhorr'd Chimæra bred; Skill'd in the dart in vain, his fons expire, And pay the forfeit of their guilty Sire. Stopp'd in the tumult Cleobulus lies, Beneath Oileus' arm, a living prize; 395 A living prize not long the Trojan stood; The thirsty faulchion drank his reeking blood: Plung'd in his throat the smoaking weapon lies; Black death, and fate unpitying, feal his eyes. Amid the ranks, with mutual thirst of fame, 400 Lycon the brave, and fierce Peneleus came; In vain their jav'lins at each other flew, Now, met in arms, their eager fwords they drew. On the plum'd crest of his Bastian foe, The daring Lycon aim'd a noble blow; 405 The fword broke short; but his Peneleus sped

V. 390. Amisodarus, who, &c.] Amisodarus was King of Caria; Bellerophon married his daughter. The ancients guessed from this passage that the Chimæra was not a siction, since Homer marks the time wherein she lived; they thought it was some beast of that Prince's herds, who being grown furious and mad, had done a great deal of mischief, like the Calydonian boar. Eustathius.

Full on the juncture of the neck and head:

410

The head divided by a stroke so just, Hung by the skin: the body sunk to dust.

O'ertaken Neamas by Merion bleeds, Pierc'd thro' his shoulder as he mounts his steeds:

Back from the car he tumbles to the ground; His swimming eyes eternal shades surround.

Next Erymas was doom'd his fate to feel,

His open mouth received the Cretan steel:

Beneath the brain the point a passage tore,

Crash'd the thin bones, and drown'd the teeth in gore.

His mouth, his eyes, his nostrils pour a flood;

He sobs his soul out in the gush of blood.

As when the flocks neglected by the fwain

(Or kids, or lambs) lie fcatter'd o'er the plain,

A troop of wolves th' unguarded charge furvey,

And rend the trembling, unrefisting prey:

Thus on the foe the Greeks impetuous came:

Troy fled, unmindful of her former fame.

425

But still at Hestor godlike Ajax aim'd,
Still, pointed at his breast, his jav'lin slam'd:
The Trojan chief, experienc'd in the field,
O'er his broad shoulders spread the massy shield,
Observ'd the storm of darts the Grecians pour,
And on his buckler caught the ringing show'r.
He sees for Greece the scale of conquest rise,
Yet stops, and turns, and saves his lov'd allies.

As

As when the hand of Jove a tempest forms,
And rolls the cloud to blacken heav'n with storms, 435
Dark o'er the fields th' ascending vapours slies,
And shades the sun, and blots the golden skies:
So from the ships, along the dusky plain,
Dire Fright and Terror drove the Trojan train.
Ev'n Hestor sled; thro' heaps of disarray

440
The fiery coursers forc'd their lord away:
While sar behind his Trojans sall consus'd,
Wedg'd in the trench, in one vast carnage bruis'd.
Chariots on chariots roll; the clashing spokes
Shock; while the madding steeds break short their yokes.

445

In vain they labour up the steepy mound;
Their charioteers lie foaming on the ground.
Fierce on the rear, with shouts, Patroclus slies:
Tumultuous clamour fills the fields and skies;
Thick drifts of dust involve their rapid slight;
(Clouds rise on clouds, and heav'n is snatch'd from sight.
Th' affrighted steeds, their dying lords cast down,
Scour o'er the fields, and stretch to reach the town.

Homer represents Hector, as he retires, making a stand from time to time, to save his troops: And he expresses it by this single word ἀνέμιμνέ; for ἀναμίμνειν does not only signify to stay, but likewise in retiring to stop from time to time; for this is the power of the preposition ἀνὰ, as in the word ἀναμάχεσθαι, which signifies to sight by sits and starts; ἀναπαλμίειν, to wrestle several times, and in many others. Eustathius.

Loud o'er the rout was heard the victor's cry,
Where the war bleeds and where the thickest die, 455
Where horse and arms, and chariots lie o'erthrown,
And bleeding heroes under axles groan.
No stop, no check the steeds of Peleus knew;
From bank to bank th' immortal coursers stew,
High-bounding o'er the fosse: the whirling car 460
Smoaks thro' the ranks, o'ertakes the stying war,
And thunders after Hestor; Hestor slies,
Patroclus shakes his lance; but sate denies.
Not with less noise, with less impetuous force,
The tide of Trojans urge their desp'rate course,
Than when in Autumn Jove his sury pours,
And earth is loaden with incessant show'rs,

(When

V. 459. From bank to bank th' immortal coursers fly, &c.] Homer has made of Hettor's horses all that poetry could make of common and mortal horses; they stand on the bank of the ditch, foaming and neighing for madness that they cannot leap it. But the immortal horses of Achilles find no obstacle; they leap the ditch, and fly into the plain. Eustathius.

V. 466. Than when in autumn Jove his fury pours-

When guilty mortals, &c.]
The Poet, in this image of an inundation, takes occasion to mention a sentiment of great piety, that such calamities were the effects of divine justice punishing the sins of mankind. This might probably refer to the tradition of an universal deluge, which was very common among the ancient heathen writers, most of them ascribing the cause of this deluge to the wrath of heaven provoked by the wickedness of men. Diodorus Siculus, 1. 15. c. 5 speaking of an earthquake

(When guilty mortals break th' eternal laws
And judges, brib'd, betray the righteous cause)
From their deep beds he bids the rivers rise,
And opens all the flood-gates of the skies:
Th' impetuous torrents from their hills obey,
Whole sields are drown'd and mountains swept away;

and inundation, which destroyed a great part of Greece, in the hundred and first Olympiad, has these words, There was a great dispute concerning the cause of this calamity: The natural philosophers generally ascribed such events to necessary causes, not to any divine hand: But they, who had more devout sentiments, gave a more probable account hereof; asserting that it was the divine vengeance alone that brought this destruction upon men who had offended the Gods with their impiety. And then proceeds to give an account of those crimes which drew down this punishment upon them.

This is one, among a thousand instances, of Homer's indirect and oblique manner of introducing moral fentences and instructions. These agreeably break in upon his reader, even in descriptions and poetical parts, where one naturally expects only painting and amusements. We have virtue put upon us by furprize, and are pleased to find a thing where we should never have looked to meet with it. I must do a noble English poet the justice to observe, that it is this particular art that is the very distinguishing excellence of Cooper'sbill; throughout which, the descriptions of places, and images raifed by the Poet, are still tending to some hint, or leading into some reflection, upon a moral life or political institution: Much in the same manner as the real fight of fuch scenes and prospects is apt to give to the mind a composed turn, and incline it to thoughts and contemplations that have a relation to the object.

Loud roars the deluge till it meets the main;
And trembling man sees all his labours vain.

475

And now the chief (the foremost troops repell'd) Back to the ships his destin'd progress held, Bore down half Troy in his refiftless way, And forc'd the routed ranks to stand the day. Between the space where filver Simois flows, 480 Where lay the fleets, and where the rampires rose, All grim with dust and blood, Patroclus stands, And turns the flaughter on the conq'ring bands. First Pronous dy'd beneath his fiery dart, Which pierc'd below the shield his valiant heart. Thestor was next; who saw the chief appear, And fell the victim of his coward fear: Shrunk up he fate with wild-and haggard eye, Nor stood to combat, nor had force to fly: Patroclus marked him as he shun'd the war, 490 And with unmanly trembling shook the car,

V. 480. Between the space where silver Simois flows, Where lay the ships, and where the rampires rise.] It looks at first sight as if Patroclus was very punctual in obeying the orders of Achilles, when he hinders the Trojans from ascending to their town, and holds an engagement with them between the ships, the river, and the wall. But he seems afterwards through very haste to have slipt his commands, for his orders were that he should drive them from the ships, and then presently return; but he proceeds farther, and his death is the consequence. Eustathius.

And dropp'd the flowing reins. Him 'twixt the jaws
The jav'lin sticks, and from the chariot draws.
As on a rock that overhangs the main,
An angler, studious of the line and cane,
Some mighty fish draws panting on the shore;
Not with less ease the barbed jav'lin bore
The gaping dastard: As the spear was shook,
He fell, and life his heartless breast forsook:

Next on Euryalus he flies; a stone,

Large as a rock, was by his fury thrown:

Full on his crown the pond'rous fragment slew,

And burst the helm, and cleft the head in two:

Prone to the ground the breathless warrior fell,

And death involv'd him with the shades of hell.

Then low in dust Epaltes, Echius, lie;

Ipheas, Evippus, Polymelus, die;

Amphoterus, and Erymas succeed;

And last Tlepolemus and Pyres bleed.

Where'er he moves, the growing slaughters spread 5 to

In heaps on heaps; a monument of dead.

When now Sarpedon his brave friends beheld Grov'ling in dust, and gasping on the field,

With

V. 512. When now Sarpedon, &c.] The Poet preparing to recount the death of Sarpedon, it will not be improper to give a sketch of some particulars which constitute a character the most faultless and amiable in the whole Iliad. This hero is by birth superior to all the chiefs of either side, being the only son of Jupiter engaged With this reproach his flying host he warms; Oh stain to honour! oh disgrace to arms!

515

engaged in this war. His qualities are no way unworthy his descent, since he every where appears equal in valour, prudence and eloquence, to the most admired heroes: Nor are these excellencies blemished with any of those defects with which the most distinguishing characters of the Poem are stained. So that the nicest criticks cannot find any thing to offend their delicacy, but must be obliged to own the manners of this hero perfect. His valour is neither rash or boisterous; his prudence neither timorous nor tricking; and his eloquence neither talkative nor boafting. He never reproaches the living, or infults the dead: but appears uniform through his conduct in the war, acted with the fame generous fentiments that engaged him in it, having no interest in the quarrel but to succour his allies in diffress. This noble life is ended with a death as glorious; for in his last moments he has no other concern, but for the honour of his friends, and the event of the day.

Homer justly represents such a character to be attended with universal esteem: As he was greatly honoured when living, he is as much lamented when dead, as the chief prop of Troy. The Poet by his death, even before that of Hector, prepares us to expect the destruction of this town, when its two great desenders are no more: and in order to make it the more signal and remarkable, it is the only death in the Iliad attended with prodigies: Even his funeral is performed by divine assistance, he being the only hero whose body is carried back to be interred in his native country, and honoured with monuments erected to his same. These peculiar and distinguishing honours seem appropriated by our Author to him alone, as the reward of a merit superior to all his other less perfect heroes.

Forsake, inglorious, the contended plain; This hand, unaided, shall the war sustain; The task be mine, this hero's strength to try, Who mows whole troops, and makes an army fly.

He spake; and speaking, leaps from off the car; 520

Patroclus lights, and sternly waits the war.

As when two vultures on the mountain's height

Stoop with resounding pinions to the fight;

They cust, they tear, they raise a screaming cry;

The desert echoes, and the rocks reply:

525

The warriors, thus oppos'd in arms, engage

With equal clamours, and with equal rage.

Jove view'd the combat, whose event foreseen,
He thus bespoke his Sister and his Queen.
The hour draws on; the destinies ordain,
530
My godlike son shall press the Phrygian plain:

V. 522. As when two vultures.] Homer compares Patroclus and Sarpedon to two vultures, because they appeared to be of equal strength and abilities, when they had dismounted from their chariots. For this reason he has chosen to compare them to birds of the same kind; as on another occasion, to image the like equality of strength, he resembles both Hedor and Patroclus to lions: But a little after this place, diminishing the force of Sarpedon, he compares him to a bull, and Patroclus to a lion. He has placed these vultures upon a high rock, because it is their nature to perch there, rather than in the boughs of trees. Their crooked talons make them unfit to walk on the ground; they could not fight steadily in the air, and therefore their fittest place is the rock. Eustathius.

Already

th

Sec

of i pof

whi

Already on the verge of death he stands, His life is ow'd to sierce Patroclus's hands.

What passions in a parent's breast debate? Say, shall I snatch him from impending sate,

535 And

V. 535. Say, Shall I [natch him from impending fate.] It appears by this passage that Homer was of opinion, that the power of God could over-rule fate or deftiny. It has puzzled many to distingush exactly the notion of the heathens as to this point. Mr. Dryden contends that Jupiter was limited by the destinies, or (to use his expression) was no better than book-keeper to them. He grounds it upon a passage in the tenth book of Virgil, where Jupiter mentions this instance of Sarpedon as a proof of his yielding to the fates. But both that, and his citation from Ovid, amounts to no more than that Jupiter gave way to destiny; not that he could not prevent it, the contrary to which is plain from his doubt and deliberation in this place. And indeed whatever may be inferred of other poets, Homer's opinion at least, as to the dispensations of God to man. has ever feemed to me very clear, and distinctly agreeable to truth. We shall find, if we examine his whole works with an eye to this doctrine, that he assigns three causes for all the good that happens in this world, which he takes a particular care to distinguish. the will of God, superior to all.

Διὸς δ' ἐπελείετο Guλή. Il. 1.
 Θεὸς διὰ πάνλα τελευτᾶ. Il. 19. v. 90.
 Ζεὺς ἀγαθόν τε κακόν τε δίδοι.—&cc.

Secondly, destiny or fate, meaning the laws and order of nature affecting the constitutions of men, and disposing them to good or evil, prosperity or missortune; which the supreme being, if it be his pleasure, may Vol. IV.

And send him safe to Lycia, distant far
From all the dangers and the toils of war;
Or to his doom my bravest offspring yield,
And satten with celestial blood, the field?

Then thus the Goddess with the radiant eyes: 540 What words are these? O sov'reign of the skies! Short is the date prescrib'd to mortal man; Shall Jove, for one, extend a narrow span? Whose bounds were fix'd before his race began? How many sons of Gods, foredoom'd to death, 545 Before proud Ilion, must resign their breath! Were thine exempt, debate would rise above, And murm'ring pow'rs condemn their partial Jove. Give the bold chief a glorious fate in fight; And when th' ascending soul has wing'd her slight, 550 Let Sleep, and Death convey, by thy command, The breathless body to his native land.

over-rule (as he is inclined to do in this place) but which he generally suffers to take effect. Thirdly, our own free will, which either by prudence over-comes those natural influences and passions, or by folly suffers us to fall under them. Odys. 1. 32.

th

70 ba ob

ca

fm fho

pla

[&]quot;Ω πόποι, οἶον δή νυ Θεές βροτοὶ ἀπιζωνται.
"Εξ ἡμένων γὰρ φασι κάκ" ἔμμεναι. οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ
Σφῆσιν ἀτασθαλ κσιν ὑπερ μόρον ἄλγε' ἔχυσιν.

^{&#}x27; Why charge mankind on heav'n their own offence,

^{&#}x27; And call their woes the crime of providence?

Blind! who themselves their miseries create,

[·] And perish by their folly, not their fate.

555

His friend and people, to his future praise,
A marble tomb, and pyramid shall raise,
And lasting honours to his ashes give;
His fame ('tis all the dead can have) shall live.

She faid; the Cloud-compeller overcome,

Assents to fate, and ratifies the doom.

Then, touch'd with grief, the weeping heav'ns distill'd A show'r of blood o'er all the fatal field;

V. 551. Let Sleep and Death convey, by thy command, The breathless body to his native land.]

The history or fable received in Homer's time, imported that Sarpedon was interred in Lycia, but it said nothing of his death. This gave the poet the liberty to make him die at Troy, provided that after his death he was carried into Lycia to preserve the fable. The expedient proposed by Juno solves all; Sarpedon dies at Troy, and is interred at Lycia: and what renders this probable is, that in those times, as at this day, Princes and persons of quality who died in foreign parts were carried into their country to be laid in the tombs of their fathers. The antiquity of this custom cannot be doubted, since it was practised in the patriarch's times: Jacob dying in Egypt, orders his children to carry him into the land of Canaan, where he desired to be buried. Gen. 49. 29. Dacier.

V. 560. A show'r of blood.] As to showers of a bloody colour, many both ancient and modern naturalists agree in afferting the reality of such appearances, tho' they account for them differently. You may see a very odd solution of them in Eustathius, Note on V. 70. of the eleventh Iliad. What seems the most probable, is that of Fromondus in his Meteorology, who observed, that a shower of this kind, which gave great cause of wonder, was nothing but a quantity of very small red insects, beat down to the earth by a heavy shower, whereby the ground was spotted in several places, as with drops of blood.

L 2

The

The God, his eyes averting from the plain,
Laments his son, predestin'd to be slain,
Far from the Lycian shores, his happy native reign.

Now met in arms, the combatants appear, Each heav'd the shield, and pois'd the lifted spear: 565 From strong Patroclus' hand the jav'lin sled, And pass'd the groin of valiant Thrasymed; The nerves unbrac'd no more his bulk fustain, He falls, and falling bites the bloody plain. Two founding darts the Lycian leader threw: 570 The first aloof with erring fury flew, The next transpierc'd Achilles' mortal steed, The gen'rous Pedasus, of Theban breed; Fix'd in the shoulder-joint, he reel'd around; Roll'd in the bloody dust, and paw'd the slipp'ry ground. His sudden fall th' entangled harness broke ; Each axle crackled, and the chariot shook: When bold Automedon to disengage The starting coursers, and restrain their rage, Divides the traces with his fword, and freed 580 Th' incumber'd chariot from the dying steed;

V. 572. —Achilles' mortal fleed, The gen'rous Pedasus—]

For the other two horses of Achilles, Xanthus and Balius, were immortal, as we have already seen in this book. It is a merry conceit of Eustathius, that Pedasus is only said to be mortal, because of the three horses he only was a gelding. 'Tis pity poor Pedasus had not a better fate to have recompensed the loss of his immortality.

The rest move on obedient to the rein; The car rolls slowly o'er the dusty plain.

The tow'ring chiefs to fiercer fight advance, And first Sarpedon whirl'd his weighty lance, Which o'er the warrior's shoulder took its course, And spent in empty air its dying force. Not so Patroclus' never-erring dart; Aim'd at his breaft, it pierc'd the mortal part, Where the strong fibres bind the folid heart. Then as the mountain oak, or poplar tall, Or pine (fit mast for some great admiral) Nods to the axe, 'till with a groaning found It finks, and fpreads its honours on the ground; Thus fell the King; and laid on earth fupine, 595 Before his chariot stretch'd his form divine: He grasp'd the dust distain'd with streaming gore, And pale in death lay groaning on the shore. So lies a bull beneath a lion's paws, While the grim favage grinds with foamy jaws 600 The trembling limbs, and fucks the smoaking blood; Deep groans, and hollow roars, rebellow through the wood.

Then to the leader of the Lycian band
The dying chief address'd his last command.

Glaucus, be bold; thy task be first to dare
The glorious dangers of destructive war,

To

V. 605 Glaucus, be bold, &c.] This dying speech L 3

To lead my troops, to combat at their head,
Incite the living and supply the dead.
Tell 'em, I charg'd 'em with my latest breath
Not unreveng'd to bear Sarpedon's death.
What grief, what shame must Glaucus undergo,
If these spoil'd arms adorn a Grecian soe?
Then as a friend, and as a warrior, sight;
Defend my body, conquer in my right;
That taught by great examples, all may try
Like thee to vanquish, or like me to die.
He ceas'd: the sates suppress his lab'ring breath,

He ceas'd; the fates suppress his lab'ring breath, And his eyes darken'd with the shades of death.

of Sarpedon deserves particular notice, being made up of noble fentiments, and fully answering the character of this brave and generous Prince, which he preserves in his last moments. Being sensible of approaching death, without any transports of rage, or defire of revenge, he calls to his friend to take care to preferve his body and arms from becoming a prey to the enemy: And this he fays without any regard to himself, but out of the most tender concern for his friend's reputation, who must for ever become infamous if he fails in this point of honour and duty. If we conceive this faid by the expiring hero, his dying looks fixed on his wounded friend, the spear remaining in his body, and the victor standing by in a kind of extafy furveying his conquest; these circumstances will form a very moving picture. Patroclus all this while, either out of humanity or furprize, omits to pull out the spear, which however he does not long forbear, but with it drawing forth his vitals, puts a period to this gallant life.

Th' infulting victor with difdain beflrode The proftrate prince, and on his bosom trod; Then drew the weapon from his panting heart, The reeking fibres clinging to the dart; From the wide wound gush'd out a stream of blood, And the foul iffu'd in the purple flood. His flying steeds the Myrmidons detain, 625 Unguided now, their mighty master slain. All impotent of aid, transfix'd with grief, Unhappy Glaucus heard the dying chief. His painful arm, yet useless with the smart Inflicted late by Teucer's deadly dart, 630 Supported on his better hand he ftay'd; To Phæbus then ('twas all he could) he pray'd. All-feeing Monarch! whether Lycia's coaft, Or facred Ilion thy bright presence boast, Pow'rful alike to ease the wretch's smart;

That thrills my arm, and shoots thro' ev'ry vein; I stand

V. 637. --- Pierc'd with pain,

oldin stranio Ass

Oh hear me! God of ev'ry healing art!

Lo! stiff with clotted blood, and pierc'd with pain,

That thrills my arm, and shoots thro' ev'ry vein.] There feems to be an overfight in this place. Glaucus in the twelfth book had been wounded with an arrow by Teucer at the attack of the wall; and here so long after, we find him still on the field, in the sharpest anguish of his wound, the blood not being yet stanch'd, &c. In the speech that next follows to Hector, there is also fomething liable to cenfure, when he imputes to the negligence

I stand unable to sustain the spear, And figh, at distance from the glorious war. 640 Low in the dust is great Sarpedon laid, Nor Yove vouchfaf'd his haples offspring aid. But thou, O God of Health! thy fuccour lend, To guard the reliques of my flaughter'd friend. For thou, tho' distant, can'st restore my might, 645 To head my Lycians, and support the fight. Apollo heard; and suppliant as he stood, His heav'nly hand restrain'd the flux of blood; He drew the dolours from the wounded part, And breath'd a spirit in his rising heart. 650 Renew'd by art divine, the hero stands, And owns th' affiftance of immortal hands. First to the fight his native troops he warms, Then loudly calls on Troy's vindictive arms; With ample strides he stalks from place to place, 655 Now fires Agenor, now Polydamas; Eneas next, and Hector he accosts; Inflaming thus the rage of all their hofts. What thoughts, regardless chief! thy breast employ? Oh too forgetful of the friends of Troy !

negligence of the Trojans the death of Sarpedon, of which they knew nothing till that very speech informed them. I beg leave to pass over these things without exposing or defending them; tho' such as these may be sufficient grounds for a most inveterate war among the criticks.

Those gen'rous friends, who, from their country far, Breathe their brave fouls out in another's war. See! where in dust the great Sarpedon lies, In action valiant, and in council wife, Who guarded right, and kept his people free; 665 To all his Lycians loft, and loft to thee! Stretch'd by Patroclus' arm on yonder plains, Oh save from hostile rage his lov'd remains: Ah let not Greece his conquer'd trophies boaft, Nor on his corfe revenge her heroes loft. 670 He spoke; each leader in his grief partook, Troy, at the loss, thro' all her legions shook. Transfix'd with deep regret, they view o'erthrown At once his country's pillar, and their own; A chief, who led to Troy's beleaguer'd wall A host of heroes, and out-shin'd them all. Fir'd, they rush on; First Hector seeks the foes, And with superior vengeance greatly glows. But o'er the dead the fierce Patroclus stands, And rouzing Ajax, rouz'd the list'ning bands. 680 Heroes, be men! be what you were before; Or weigh the great occasion, and be more. The chief who taught our lufty walls to yield, Lies pale in death, extended on the field. To guard his body Troy in numbers flies;

'Tis half the glory to maintain our prize.

Haste, strip his arms, the slaughter round him spread, And send the living Lycians to the dead.

The heroes kindle at his fierce command;
The martial squadrons close on either hand: 690
Here Troy and Lycia charge with loud alarms,
The falia there, and Greece, oppose their arms.
With horsid shouts they circle round the slain;
The clash of armour rings o'er all the plain.
Great Jove, to swell the horrors of the fight, 695
O'er the fierce armies pours pernicious night,
And round his son consounds the warring hosts,
His sate ennobling with a croud of ghosts.

Now Greece gives way, and great Epigeus falls;

Agacleus' son, from Budium's lofty walls:

Who chas'd for murder thence, a suppliant came
To Peleus, and the silver-sooted dame;

Now sent to Troy, Achilles' arms to aid,

He pays due vengeance to his kinsman's shade.

Soon as his luckless hand had touch'd the dead,

A rock's large fragment thunder'd on his head;

V. 695. Great Jove—O'er the fierce armies pour'd pernicious Night.] Homer calls here by the name of Night, the whirl-winds of thick dust which rise from beneath the feet of the combatants, and which hinder them from knowing one another. Thus poetry knows how to convert the most natural things into miracles; these two armies are buried in dust round Sarpedon's body;
'tis Jupiter who pours upon them an obscure night, to make the battle bloodier, and to honour the funeral of his son by a greater number of victims. Eustathius.

Hurl'd by Hectorean force, it cleft in twain

His shatter'd helm, and stretch'd him o'er the slain.

Fierce to the van of fight Patroclus came; And, like an eagle darting at his game, Sprung on the Trojan and the Lycian band: What grief thy heart, what fury nrg'd thy hand, Oh gen'rous Greek! when with full vigour thrown At Stenelaus flew the mighty stone, Which funk him to the dead : when Troy, too near 715 That arm, drew back; and Hector learn'd to fear. Far as an able hand a lance can throw, Or at the lists, or at the fighting foe; So far the Trojans from their lines retir'd; Till Glaucus, turning, all the rest inspir'd. Then Bathycleus fell beneath his rage, The only hope of Chalcon's trembling age: Wide o'er the land was stretch'd his large domain, With stately seats, and riches, bless'd in vain: Him, bold with youth, and eager to purfue 725 The flying Lycians, Glaucus met, and flew; Pierc'd thro' the bosom with a sudden wound, He fell, and falling, made the fields refound. Th' Achaians forrow for their hero flain; With conqu'ring shouts the Trojans shake the plain, 730 And croud to spoil the dead: the Greeks oppose; An iron circle round the carcass grows.

Then brave Laogonus refigned his breath, Dispatch'd by Merion to the shades of death: On Ida's holy hill he made abode, 735 The priest of Yove, and honour'd like his God. Between the jaw and ear the jav'lin went; The foul, exhaling, isfu'd at the vent. His spear Eneas at the victor threw, Who stooping forward from the death withdrew; 740 The lance his'd harmless on his cov'ring shield, And trembling strook, and rooted in the field; There yet scarce spent, it quivers on the plain, Sent by the great Æneas' arm in vain. Swift as thou art (the raging hero cries) And skill'd in dancing to dispute the prize, My spear the destin'd passage had it found, Had fix'd thy active vigour to the ground. Oh valiant leader of the Dardan host! (Infulted Merion thus retorts the boaft) Strong as you are, 'tis mortal force you truft, An arm as ftrong may stretch thee in the dust.

V. 746. And skill'd in dancing.] This stroke of raillery upon Meriones is founded on the custom of his country. For the Cretans were peculiarly addicted to this exercise, and in particular are said to have invented the Pyrrbic dance, which was performed in complete armour. See Note on V. 797. in the thirteenth book. And if to this my lance thy fate be giv'n,

Vain are thy vaunts; Success is still from heav'n;

This instant sends thee down to Pluto's coast,

Mine is the glory, his thy parting ghost.

O friend (Menætius' fon this answer gave)
With words to combat, ill besits the brave:
Not empty boasts the sons of Troy repel,
Your swords must plunge them to the shades of hell.
To speak, beseems the council; but to dare
761
In glorious action, is the task of war.

This faid, Patroclus to the battle flies;
Great Merion follows, and new shouts arise:
Shields, helmets rattle, as the warriors close;
And thick and heavy sounds the storm of blows.
As thro' the shrilling vale, or mountain ground,
The labours of the woodman's axe resound;
Blows following blows are heard re-echoing wide,
While crackling forests fall on ev'ry side.
Thus echo'd all the fields with loud alarms,
So sell the warriors, and so rung their arms.

Now great Sarpedon, on the fandy shore,
His heav'nly form defac'd with dust and gore,
And stuck with darts by warring heroes shed,
Lies undistinguish'd from the vulgar dead.
His long-disputed corse the chiefs inclose,
On ev'ry side the busy combat grows;

Thick,

Thick, as beneath some shepherd's thatch'd abode,

(The pails high-foaming with a milky flood,) 780

The buzzing slies, a persevering train,
Incessant swarm, and chas'd return again.

Tove view'd the combat with a stern survey, And eyes that flash'd intolerable day; Fix'd on the field his fight, his breast debates The vengeance due, and meditates the fates; Whether to urge their prompt effect, and call The force of Hellor to Patroclus' fall, and all of This instant fee his short-liv'd trophies won, And ftretch him breathless on his flaughter'd fon; 790 Or yet, with many a foul's untimely flight, Augment the fame and horror of the fight? To crown Achilles' valiant friend with praise At length he dooms; and this his last of days Shall fet in glory; bids him drive the foe; 795 Nor unattended, see the shades below. Then Hedor's mind he fills with dire dismay; He mounts his car, and calls his hofts away, Sunk with Troy's heavy fates, he fees decline

Then, nor before, the hardy Lycians fled, And left their monarch with the common dead: Around, in heaps on heaps, a dreadful wall Of carnage rises, as the heroes fall.

The scales of Jove, and pants with awe divine.

800

(So Jove decreed!) At length the Greeks obtain 805 The prize contested, and despoil the slain. The radiant arms are by Patroclus borne, Patroclus' ships the glorious spoils adorn.

Then thus to Phæbus, in the realms above, Spoke from his throne the cloud-compelling Jove. 810 Descend, my Phæbus! on the Phrygian plain, And from the fight convey Sarpedon flain; Then bathe his body in the crystal flood, With dust dishonour'd, and deform'd with blood: O'er all his limbs ambrofial odours shed, 815 And with celestial robes adorn the dead. Those rites discharg'd, his sacred corse bequeath To the foft arms of filent Sleep and Death; They to his friends the mournful charge shall bear, His friends a tomb and pyramid shall rear: 820 What honours mortals after death receive. Those unavailing honours we may give! Apollo bows, and from mount Ida's height,

Swift to the field precipitates his flight;
Thence from the war the breathless hero bore,
Veil'd in a cloud, to filver Simois' shore:
There bath'd his honourable wounds, and drest
His manly members in th' immortal vest;
And with perfumes of sweet ambrosial dews,
Restores his freshness, and his form renews.

830

Then

Then Sleep and Death, two twins of winged race, Of matchless swiftness, but of silent pace,

V. 831. Then Sleep and Death, &c.] It is the notion of Eustathius, that by this interment of Sarpedon, where Sleep and Death are concerned, Homer feems to intimate, that there was nothing else but an empty monument of that hero in Lycia; for he delivers him not to any real or folid persons, but to certain unsubstantial phantoms to conduct his body thither. He was forced (continues my author) to make use of these machines, fince there were no other deities he could with any likelihood employ about this work; for the ancients (as appears from Euripides, Hippolyta) had a superstition that all dead bodies were offensive to the Gods, they being of a nature celestial and uncorrupti-But this last remark is impertinent, fince we see in this place Apollo is employed in adorning and embalming the body of Sarpedon.

What I think better accounts for the passage, is what Philostratus in Heroicis assirms, that this alludes to a piece of antiquity. "The Lycians shewed the bo-"dy of Sarpedon, strew'd over with aromatical spices, "in such a graceful composure, that he seemed to be

" only asleep: And it was this that gave rise to the fection of Homer, that his rites were performed by

" Sleep and Death.

But after all these refined observations, it is probable the Poet intended only to represent the death of this favourite son of Jupiter, and one of his most amiable characters, in a gentle and agreeable view, without any circumstances of dread and horror; intimating by this siction, that he was delivered out of all the tumults and miseries of life by two imaginary Deities, Sleep and Death, who alone can give mankind ease and exemption from their misfortunes.

Receiv'd Sarpedon, at the God's command, And in a moment reach'd the Lycian land : The corfe amidst his weeping friends they laid, Where endless honours wait the facred shade.

835

Mean while Patroclus pours along the plains, With foaming courfers, and with loofen'd reins. Fierce on the Trojan and the Lycian crew, Ah, blind to fate! thy headlong fury flew; 840 Against what fate and pow'rful Tove ordain, Vain was thy friend's command, thy courage vain, For he the God, whose counsels uncontroul'd Difmay the mighty, and confound the bold: The God who gives, refumes, and orders all, He urg'd thee on, and urg'd thee on to fall.

Who first, brave hero! by that arm was slain, Who last, beneath thy vengeance press'd the plain;

V. 847. Who first, brave bero, &c.] The Poet in a very moving and solemn way turns his discourse to Patroclus. He does not accost his muse, as it is usual with him to do, but enquires of the hero himself who was the first, and who the last, who fell by his hand? This address diffinguishes and fignalizes Patroclus, (to whom Homer uses it more frequently, than I remember on any other occasion) as if he was some genius or divine being, and at the same time it is very pathetical, and apt to move our compassion. The same kind of apostrophe is used by Virgil to Camilla.

Quem telo primum, quem postremum, aspera virgo! Deficis? Aut quot humi morientia corpora fundis?

When heav'n itself thy fatal fury led,	mesa, J
And call'd to fill the number of the dead?	850
Adrestus first; Autonous next succeeds;	34.
Echeclus follows; next young Megas bleeds:	1172 17
Epistor, Menalippus, bite the ground;	A
The flaughter, Elasus and Mulius crown'd:
Then funk Pylartes to eternal night;	855
The rest dispersing, trust their fates to flight.	d ,dit.
M C 1 10 min in a

Now Troy had stoop'd beneath his matchless pow'r,
But flaming Phæbus kept the sacred tow'r.
Thrice at the battlements Patroclus strook,
His blazing Ægis thrice Apollo shook:

He try'd the fourth; when, bursting from the cloud,
A more than mortal voice was heard aloud:

Patroclus! cease: This heav'n-defended wall

Defies thy lance; not fated yet to fall;

Thy friend, thy greater far, it shall withstand, 865

Troy shall not stoop ev'n to Achilles' hand.

So spoke the God, who darts celestial fires:
The Greek obeys him, and with awe retires.
While Hettor, checking at the Scan gates
His panting coursers, in his breast debates,
Or in the field his forces to employ,
Or draw the troops within the walls of Troy.
Thus while he thought, beside him Phabus stood,
In Asius' shape, who reign'd by Sangar's stood;

BOOK XVI. HOMER'S ILIAD.	255
(Thy brother, Hecuba! from Dymas fprung,	875
A valiant warrior, haughty, bold, and young.)	5. V fr
Thus he accosts him. What a shameful sight!
Gods! is it Hedor that forbears the fight?	4.04
Were thine my vigour, this successful spear
Should foon convince thee of fo false a fear.	880
Turn then, ah turn thee to the field of fame,
And in Patroclus' blood efface thy shame;	1
Perhaps Apollo shall thy arms succeed,
And heav'n ordains him by thy lance to bleed.
So spoke th' inspiring God; then took his flight,
And plung'd amidst the tumult of the fight.	886
He bids Cebrion drive the rapid car:
The lash resounds; the coursers rush to war.	1
The God the Grecians' finking fouls deprest,	Livi
And pour'd swift spirits thro' each Trojan breaft.	890
Patroclus lights, impatient for the fight;
A spear his lest, a stone employs his right:
With all his nerves he drives it at the foe;
Pointed above, and rough and gross below:
The falling ruin crush'd Cebrion's head,	895
(The lawless offspring of King Priam's bed.)	35
His front, brows, eyes, one undistinguish'd wound	,
The bursting balls drop fightless to the ground.
The charioteer, while yet he held the rein,
Struck from the car, falls headlong on the plain.	900

To the dark shades the soul unwilling glides,
While the proud victor thus his fall derides.
Good heav'ns! what active feats yon' artist shows,
What skilful divers are our Phrygian soes!

Mark

V. 904. What skilful divers, &c.] The original is literally thus: 'Tis pity be is not nearer the fea, he would furnish good quantities of excellent oisters, and the storms would not frighten him; see how he exercises and plunges from the top of his chariot into the plain! Who would think that there were such good divers at Troy? This feems to be a little too long; and if this passage be really Homer's, I could almost swear that he intended to let us know, that a good foldier may be an indifferent jester. But I very much doubt whether this passage be his: It is very likely these five last verses were added by some of the antient criticks, whose caprices Homer has frequently undergone: or perhaps fome of the rhapfodifts, who, in reciting his verses, made additions of their own to please their auditors. And what persuades me of its being so, is, that 'tis by no means probable that Patroclus, who had lately blamed Meriones for his little-raillery against Eneas, and told him, "that " 'twas not by raillery or invective that they were to " repel the Trojans, but by dint of blows; that Coun-" cil required words, but War deeds:" It is by no means probable, I say, that the same Patroclus should forget that excellent precept, and amuse himself with raillery, especially in the fight of Hedor. I am therefore of opinion that Patroclus faid no more than this verse, Ω πόποι, &c. Good Gods! what an active Trojan it is, and how cleverly be dives; and that the five following are strangers, tho' very ancient. Dacier.

I must just take notice, that, however mean or ill placed these railleries may appear, there have not been wanting

Mark with what ease they sink into the sand! 905 Pity! that all their practice is by land.

Then rushing sudden on his prostrate prize,
To spoil the carcass sierce Patroclus slies:
Swift as a lion, terrible and bold,
That sweeps the fields, depopulates the fold;
Pierc'd thro' the dauntless heart, then tumbles slain,
And from his fatal courage finds his bane.
At once bold Hetter leaping from his car,
Defends the body, and provokes the war.
Thus for some slaughter'd hind, with equal rage,
Two lordly rulers of the wood engage;

wanting such fond lovers of Homer as have admired and imitated them. Milton himself is of this number, as may be seen from those very low jests, which he has put into the mouth of Satan and his angels in the fixth book. What Eneas says to Meriones upon his dancing, is nothing so trivial as those lines; where after the displosion of their diabolical enginy, angel rolling on arch-angel, they are thus derided.

'-When we propounded terms

Of composition, strait they chang'd their minds,

' Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,

As they would dance; yet for a dance they feem'd Somewhat extravagant and wild, perhaps,

For joy of offer'd peace—&c.
—Terms that amus'd em all,

1

And stumbled many; who receives them right Had need from head to foot well understand:

Not understood this gift they have besides,

They shew us when our foes walk not upright.

Stung with fierce hunger, each the prey invades. And echoing roars rebellow thro' the shades. Stern Hedor fastens on the warrior's head, And by the foot Patroclus drags the dead, While all around, confusion, rage, and fright Mix the contending hofts in mortal fight. So pent by hills, the wild winds roar aloud In the deep bosom of some gloomy wood; Leaves, arms, and trees aloft in air are blown, The broad oaks crackle, and the Sylvans groan; This way and that, the rattling thicket bends, And the whole forest in one crash descends. Not with less noise, with less tumultuous rage, In dreadful shock the mingled hosts engage. 930 Darts show'r'd on darts, now round the carcass ring; Now flights of arrows bounding from the string: Stones follow stones; some clatter on the fields, Some hard, and heavy, shake the founding shields. But where the rifing whirlwind clouds the plains, 935 Sunk in foft dust the mighty chief remains, And, stretch'd in death, forgets the guiding reins!

Now flaming from the Zenith, Sol had driv'n
His fervid orb thro' half the vault of heav'n;
While on each host with equal tempest fell
The show'ring darts, and numbers sunk to hell.
But when his evening wheels o'erhung the main,
Glad conquest rested on the Grecian train.

Then

Then from amidst the tumult and alarms. They draw the conquer'd corfe, and radiant arms. 945 Then rash Patroclus with new fury glows, And breathing flaughter, pours amid the foes. Thrice on the press like Mars himself he flew. And thrice three heroes at each onfet flew. There ends thy glory I there the fates untwine 950 The last, black remnant of so bright a line; Apollo dreadful ftops thy middle way; Death calls, and heav'n allows no longer day! For lo! the God, in dusky clouds enshrin'd, Approaching dealt a stagg'ring blow behind. 955 The weighty shock his neck and shoulders feel; His eyes flash sparkles, his stunn'd senses reel In giddy darkness: Far to distance flung, His bounding helmet on the champain rung. Achilles' plume is stain'd with dust and gore; 960 That plume, which never stoop'd to earth before,

V. 952. Apollo dreadful, &c.] If Homer is refolved to do any thing extraordinary, or arbitrary, which his readers may not very well relish, he takes care however to prepare them by degrees for receiving such innovations. He had before given us a sketch of this trick of the God's in the thirteenth book, where Neptune serves Alcathous much in the same manner. Apollo here carries it a little farther; and both these are specimens of what we are to expect from Minerwa at the death of Hedor in Il. 22.

Long us'd, untouch'd in fighting fields to shine,
And shade the temples of the man divine.

Jove dooms it now on Hedor's helm to nod;
Not long—for fate pursues him and the God. 965
His spear in shivers falls: His ample shield
Drops from his arm: His baldrick strows the field:
The corslet his astonish'd breast forsakes:
Loose is each joint; each nerve with horror shakes.
Stupid he stares, and all-assistless stands: 970
Such is the force of more than mortal hands!

A Dardan youth there was, well known to fame, From Panthus sprung, Euphorbus was his name; Fam'd for the manage of the foaming horse, Skill'd in the dart, and matchless in the course: Full twenty knights he tumbled from the car, While yet he learn'd his rudiments of war, His vent'rous spear first drew the hero's gore; He struck, he wounded, but he durst no more; Nor tho' disarm'd, Patroclus' fury stood: 9807 But swift with-drew the long-protended wood, And turn'd him fhort, and herded in the croud. Thus, by an arm divine, and mortal spear, Wounded at once, Patroclus yields to fear, Retires for fuccour to his focial train, And flies the fate which heav'n decreed, in vain,

Stern

BOOK XVI. HOMER's ILIAD. 261

Stern Hector, as the bleeding chief he views, Breaks thro' the ranks, and his retreat purfues: The lance arrests him with a mortal wound; He falls, earth thunders, and his arms refound. With him all Greece was funk; that moment all Her yet furviving heroes feem'd to fall. So fcorch'd with heat along the defart shore, The roaring lion meets a briftly boar, Fast by the spring; they both dispute the flood, 905 With flaming eyes, and jaws befmear'd with blood; At length the fov'reign favage wins the strife, And the torn boar refigns his thirst and life. Patroclus thus, fo many chiefs o'erthrown, So many lives effus'd, expires his own. As dying now at Hector's feet he lies; He sternly views him, and triumphing cries: Lie there, Patroclus! and with thee, the joy Thy pride once promis'd, of subverting Troy;

V. 1003. Lie there, Patroclus! &c.] There is much spirit in this sarcasm of Hedor upon Patroclus: Nor is Achilles exempt from the severity of the reflection, who (as he imagines) has persuaded his dearest friend to attempt exploits that were impracticable. He touches him also, for staying at home in security himself, and encouraging Patroclus to undertake this perillous adventure, and to seek after spoils which he was never like to enjoy. Eustathius.

The fancy'd scenes of Ilion wrapt in slames,
And thy soft pleasures serv'd with captive dames!
Unthinking man! I sought, those tow'rs to free,
And guard that beauteous race from Lords like thee;
But thou a prey to vulturs shalt be made;
Thy own Achilles cannot lend thee aid;
Tho' much at parting that great chief might say,
And much enjoin thee, this important day,
"Return not, my brave friend (perhaps he said)
"Without the bloody arms of Hedor dead."
He spoke, Patroclus march'd, and thus he sped. 1015

Supine, and wildly gazing on the skies, With faint, expiring breath, the chief replies.

Vain boaster! cease, and know the pow'ss divine;

Jove's and Apollo's is this deed, not thine;

To heav'n is ow'd whate'er your own you call, 1020

And heav'n itself disarm'd me ere my fall.

Had twenty mortals, each thy match in might,

Oppos'd me fairly, they had sunk in fight:

By Fate and Phabus was I first o'erthrown,

Euphorbus next; the third mean part thy own. 1025

But thou, imperious! hear my latest breath;

The Gods inspire it, and it sounds thy death.

Infulting

V. 1026. —Hear my latest breath, The Gods inspire it.—] Infulting man! thou shalt be soon, as I;
Black fate hangs o'er thee, and thy hour draws nigh;
Ev'n now on life's last verge I see thee stand, 1030
I see thee fall, and by Achilles' hand.

He faints; the foul unwilling wings her way, (The beauteous body left a load of clay)

Flits

It is an opinion of great antiquity, that when the foul is on the point of being delivered from the body, and makes a nearer approach to the divine nature, at such a time its views are stronger and clearer, and the mind endowed with a spirit of true prediction. So Artemon of Miletum says in his book of dreams, that when the soul has collected all its powers from every limb and part of the body, and is just ready to be severed from it, at that time it becomes prophetical. Socrates also in his defence to the Athenians, "I am now arrived at the verge of life, wherein it is familiar with people to foretell what will come to pass." Eufathius.

This opinion feems alluded to in those admirable lines of Waller.

Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view,

" Who stand upon the threshold of the new."

V. 1032. The death of Patroclus.] I sometimes think I am in respect to Homer much like Sancho Panca with regard to Don Quixote. I believe upon the whole that no mortal ever came near him for wisdom, learning, and all good qualities. But sometimes there are certain starts which I cannot tell what to make of, and am forced to own that my master is a little out of the way, if not quite beside himself. The present passage

M 2

Flits to the lone, uncomfortable coast; A naked, wand'ring, melancholy ghost! 1035

dent design and and west that some Then of the death of Patroclus, attended with so many odd circumstances to overthrow this hero, (who might, for all I can see, as decently have fallen by the force of Hector) are what I am at a loss to excuse, and must indeed (on my own opinion) give them up to the criticks. I really think almost all those parts in Homer which have been objected against with most clamour and fury, are honestly defensible, and none of them (to confess my private fentiment) feem to me to be faults of any confideration, except this conduct in the death of Patroclus, the length of Neftor's discourse in Lib. 11, the speech of Achilles's horse in the 19th, the conversation of that hero with Aneas in Lib. 20, and the manner of Hector's flight round the walls of Troy, in Lib. 22. I hope, after so free a confession, no reasonable modern will think me touched with the 'ounpopavia of Madam Dacier and others. I am sensible of the extremes which mankind run into, in extolling and depreciating authors: We are not more violent and unreasonable in attacking those who are not yet established in fame, than in defending those who are, even in every minute trifle. Fame is a debt, which when we have kept from people as long as we can, we pay with a prodigious interest, which amounts to twice the value of the principal. Thus it is with ancient works as with ancient coins, they pass for a vast deal more than they were worth at first; and the very obscurities and deformities which time has thrown upon them, are the facred ruft, which enhances their value to all true lovers of antiquity.

But as I have owned what feem my author's faults, and subscribed to the opinion of Horace, that Homer fometimes nods; I think I ought to add that of

Longinus

Then Hedor pauling, as his eyes he fed
On the pale carcase, thus address'd the dead.

. Hoself to life active action

From

Longinus as to such negligences. I can no way so well conclude the notes to this book as with the translation of it.

" It may not be improper to discuss the question in " general, which of the two is the more estimable, a " faculty fublime, or a faultless mediocrity? and con-" fequently, if of two works, one has the greater " number of beauties, and the other attains directly " to the fublime, which of these shall in equity car-" ry the prize? I am really perfuaded that the true " fublime is incapable of that purity which we find in " compositions of a lower strain, and in effect that " too much accuracy finks the spirit of an author; " whereas the case is generally the same with the fa-" vourites of nature, and those of fortune, who with " the best economy cannot in the great abundance " they are bleft with, attend to the minuter articles of " their expence. Writers of a cool imagination are " cautious in their management, and venture nothing " merely to gain the character of being correct; but " the fublime is bold and enterprifing, notwithstanding " that on every advance the danger encreafeth. Here " probably fome will fay that men take a malicious fa-" tisfaction in exposing the blemishes of an author; " that his errors are never forgot, while the most ex-" quisite beauties leave but very imperfect traces on " the memory. To obviate this objection, I will fo-" lemnly declare, that in my criticisms on Homer and " other authors, who are univerfally allowed to be au-" thentick standards of the sublime, tho' I have cen-" fured their failings with as much freedom as any one, " yet I have not prefumed to accuse them of voluntary " faults,

From whence this boding speech, the stern decree

Of death denounc'd, or why denounc'd to me?

Why not as well Achilles' fate be giv'n

1040

To Hector's lance? Who knows the will of heav'n?

Penfive

" faults, but have gently remarked fome little defects. " and negligences, which the mind being intent on " nobler ideas did not condescend to regard. And on " these principles I will venture to lay it down for a " maxim, that the fublime (purely on account of its " grandeur) is preferable to all other kinds of style, " however it may fall into some inequalities. The " Argonauticks of Apollonius are faultless in their kind; " and Theocritus hath fhewn the happiest vein ima-" ginable for pastorals, excepting those in which he " has deviated from the country: And yet if it were " put to your choice, would you have your name " descend to posterity with the reputation of either of " those poets, rather than that of Homer? Nothing " can be more correct than the Erigone of Eratofthenes: " but is he therefore a greater poet than Archilochus, " in whole composures perspicuity and order are often. " wanting; the divine fury of his genius being too " impatient for restraint, and superior to law? Again, " do you prefer the odes of Bacchilides to Pindar's, " or the scenes of Ion of Chies to those of Sophocles? "Their writings are allowed to be correct, polite and " delicate; whereas, on the other hand, Pindar and Sophocles fometimes hurry on with the greatest im-" petuofity, and like a devouring flame feize and fet " on fire whatever comes in their way; but on a " fudden the conflagration is extinguished, and they " miserably slag when no body expects it. Yet " none have fo little discernment as not to prefer 64 the

Pensive he said; then pressing as he lay

His breathless bosom, tore the lance away;

And upwards cast the corps: The reeking spear

He shakes, and charges the bold charioteer. 1045

" the fingle Oedipus of Sophocles to all the Tragedies that Ion ever brought on the stage.

"In our decisions therefore on the characters of " these great men, who have illustrated what is use-" ful and necessary with all the graces and elevation of ftile; we must impartially confess that, with " all their errors, they have more perfections than the " nature of man can almost be conceived capable of " attaining: For it is merely human to excel in other " kinds of writing, but the fublime ennobleth our na-" ture, and makes near approaches to divinity: He " who commits no faults, is barely read without cen-" fure; but a genius truly great excites admiration. " In short, the magnificence of a single period in one " of these admirable authors, is sufficient to atone for " all their defects: Nay, farther, if any one should " collect from Homer, Demosthenes, Plato, and other " celebrated heroes of antiquity, the little errors that " have escaped them; they would not bear the least " proportion to the infinite beauties to be met with " in every page of their writings. It is on this account " that envy, through fo many ages, hath never been " able to wrest from them the prize of eloquence which " their merits have so justly acquired: An acquisi-" tion which they still are, and will in all probability

" As long as streams in filver mazes rove,

" continue possessed of,

[&]quot; Or spring with annual green renews the grove.
Mr. Fenton.

But fwift Automedon with loos'ned reins
Rapt in the chariot o'er the distant plains,
Far from his rage th' immortal coursers drove;
Th' immortal coursers were the gift of Jove.

The End of the Fourth Volume.

